

PART 1: THE QUESTION

1. The question

1. In Resolution A/RES/77/247 on 30 December 2022, the United Nations General Assembly asked the present Court to:

...render an advisory opinion on the following questions, considering the rules and principles of international law, including the Charter of the United Nations, international humanitarian law, international human rights law, relevant resolutions of the Security Council, the General Assembly and the Human Rights Council, and the advisory opinion of the Court of 9 July 2004:

(a) Israel's actions since 1967—occupation, annexation, settlements, and discrimination—violate international law and the Palestinian right to self-determination, triggering legal duties for Israel, other states, and the global community.

(b) How do the policies and practices of Israel referred to in paragraph ... (a) above affect the legal status of the occupation, and what are the legal consequences that arise for all States and the United Nations from this status?¹

2. Question (a) asks what the legal consequences are of three related matters, which are described in question (b) as “policies and practices of Israel”:

(1) First, “the ongoing violation by Israel of the right of the Palestinian people to self-determination”.

(2) Second, “its [Israel's] prolonged occupation, settlement and annexation of the Palestinian territory occupied since 1967, including measures aimed at altering the demographic composition, character and status of the Holy City of Jerusalem”.

(3) Third, “its [Israel's] adoption of related discriminatory legislation and measures”.

1 - GA Res. 30 ,247/77 December 2022, <https://www.un.org/en/ga/77/resolutions.shtml>.

3. A determination of the legal consequences of these “policies and practices” requires a determination of two sub-questions:

(1) The first sub-question is, in each case, how, international law has been/is being violated—the question of legality/illegality.

(2) The second sub-question is, in each case, and cumulatively, what the legal consequences of the answer to the first sub-question are for international legal persons legally implicated in the situation.

4. Question (b) asks:

How do the policies and practices of Israel referred to in paragraph ... (a) above affect the legal status of the occupation, and what are the legal consequences that arise for all States and the United Nations from this status?

Paragraph (b) highlights the need for the Court to explicitly assess how Israel’s “policies and practices” impact the legal status of the occupation—not merely as background to determining legal consequences (paragraph a), but as a central legal question in its own right.

5. Paragraph (a) presents the third “policy and practice” as intrinsically linked to the denial of Palestinian self-determination and Israel’s occupation, settlement, and annexation. The second set of actions draws its legal character from the first; thus, assessing their legality hinges on the foundational violation of the right to self-determination.

6. Paragraph (b) calls on the Court to deliver a comprehensive legal assessment of the occupation of Palestinian territory since 1967—not limited to a single legal domain. This includes evaluating the legality of all three “policies and practices”: the denial of self-determination, settlement and annexation (including changes to Jerusalem), and discriminatory laws and measures.

2. Two aspects to the question on legality/illegality of the occupation

2.a. Is the existence of the occupation lawful?

7. The first legality/illegality question is whether the existence of the occupation, in and of itself, has a legal basis. If it does not, then it is existentially illegal. This question falls to be determined according to the law of self-determination and, because the occupation is a use of force, the law on the use of force.

2.b. Is the conduct of the occupation lawful?

8. The second key legal question is whether the conduct of the occupation itself is unlawful. This is assessed under multiple legal frameworks: the right to self-determination (including return), the laws of war, international humanitarian law, human rights law, and prohibitions against racial discrimination and apartheid.

PART 2 : APPLICABLE LAW

3. Introduction

9. The General Assembly requested that the Court render its Opinion ...considering the rules and principles of international law, including the Charter of the United Nations, international humanitarian law, international human rights law, relevant resolutions of the Security Council, the General Assembly and the Human Rights Council, and the advisory opinion of the Court of 9 July 2004.

This is a request to apply all relevant areas of international law, including, but not limited to, the particular areas of law mentioned.

10. The present Part explains what these areas of law are. It covers certain relevant features of their substantive content. It also explains the position of certain of these rules having jus cogens and erga omnes status.

4. Self-determination

4.a. Introduction

11. The right to self-determination exists in customary international law, is recognized by the UN Charter and is enshrined in international human rights law, in the latter case in common Article 1 of the ICCPR and ICESCR.²

4.b. Existence and basis for the right

12. The Palestinian people have a legal right of self-determination. This has been universally accepted and affirmed by States and UN organs as well as the present Court.

13. The Palestinian people have this legal right on two bases.

(1) In the first place, there is a sui generis treaty-based right derived from the provisions of Article 22 of the League of Nations Covenant of 1919 applicable to Palestine as a particular type of Mandate.³

(2) In the second place, the right stems from the ‘(anti-)colonial’ basis that became part of customary international law, because of the Palestinian people having been subjected to colonial rule by the British empire, and the continued denial of their ability to exercise self-determination since the creation of Israel in 1948, and the occupation of the West Bank, including East Jerusalem and Gaza since 1967.⁴

14. The right of self-determination of the Palestinian people has two elements, based on the general international legal framework of external self-determination and internal self-determination. It encompasses, in part pursuant to this general framework, a right to return.

4.c. External self-determination

2 - International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, 16 December 1966, 1966 U.N.T.S. 171 (“ICCPR”), Art. 1; International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, 16 December 1966, 1966 U.N.T.S. 3 (“ICESCR”), Art. 1.

3 - See Ralph Wilde, ‘Tears of the Olive Trees: Mandatory Palestine, the UK, and accountability for colonialism in international law’, Journal of the History of International Law (2022).

4 - See Ralph Wilde, ‘Using the master’s tools to dismantle the master’s house: international law and Palestinian liberation’ 22 Palestine Yearbook of International Law (2021) 74-3), Sections IV-VI and sources cited therein.

15. External self-determination entails a people's right to self-govern free from foreign domination, such as occupation, which inherently obstructs its exercise. Accordingly, the Palestinian people are entitled to the end of such domination, and Israel is legally obligated to end its occupation.,

Every State has the duty to refrain from any forcible action which deprives peoples... of their right to self-determination and freedom and independence.⁵

16. Particular features of this right to be free/obligation to enable such freedom, or, put differently, the right for the occupation to be terminated/the obligation to terminate the occupation, are as follows:

(1) It operates and exists simply and exclusively by virtue of the Palestinian people being entitled to it. It is not, therefore, something that depends on anyone else agreeing to it, whether Israel, or any State, organization or entity, etc. It is a right.

(2) The anti-colonial form of external self-determination adopted in international law in the first half of the 20th Century, applicable to the Palestinian people, was a repudiation of the concept of 'trusteeship over people'.⁶ According to this concept, people were, ostensibly, potentially to be granted their freedom by colonial authorities only if and when they were deemed 'ready', ostensibly because of their stage of 'development', by those authorities. The anti-colonial self-determination rule, which was the international legal basis for recognizing decolonization, constitutes a repudiation and removal of this approach, replacing it with an automatic right. The new rule was and is rooted in the basic entitlement of people to freedom, not 'readiness' or reaching a certain stage of development. In the words of the United Nations General Assembly in Resolution 1514(XV) of 1960, 'inadequacy of preparedness should never serve as a pretext for denying independence'.⁷ Furthermore, the right operates regardless of whether the authority depriving the people of their ability to exercise self-rule agrees to relinquish control.

(3) Necessarily, then, this form of 'freedom'—the end of external control—is to be realized immediately and automatically, without preconditions, such as standards, of whatever character, having to be met first.

(4) This fundamental character of self-determination, when compared to other considerations that do not share this fundamental character, is reflected in the way that it has jus cogens—non-derogable—status in international law: it takes precedence over other rules of international law (which would be most of them) that do not have the same status. Thus, the United Nations Human Rights Council, in Resolution 49/28 of 11 April 2022, emphasised “that this jus cogens norm of international law [self-determination as vested in the Palestinian people] is a basic prerequisite for achieving a just, lasting and comprehensive peace in the Middle East”.⁸ Jus cogens is addressed further below in the present Part.

4.d. Internal self-determination

17. This right ensures equal treatment for individuals and groups, particularly regarding group identity, in states where they hold citizenship (e.g., Palestinian citizens of Israel). It includes protection from discrimination and the enjoyment of rights tied to their identity, covered under international human rights law, including non-discrimination, political rights, and the rights of minorities and indigenous peoples.

4.e. Right of return

4.e.i. General position based on the right of self-determination

18. The Palestinian people, individually and collectively, have a legal right to return to their homes and land. The right to return is integral to the right of self-determination itself.

4.e.ii. Affirmations by the UN General Assembly and Security Council

19. The right to return of Palestine refugees has been repeatedly affirmed by the UN General Assembly since 1948.

20. In Resolution 194 (III), 11 December 1948, passed in the context of and relating to the Nakba at the time of 1948, the General Assembly resolved that: ...refugees wishing to return to their homes and live at peace with their neighbours should be permitted to do so at the earliest practicable date, and that compensation should be paid for the property of those choosing not to return and for loss of or damage to property which, under principles of international law or in equity, should be made good by the Governments or authorities responsible.⁹

In Resolution 3236 (XXIX), 22 November 1974, the General Assembly recognized “the inalienable right of Palestinians to return to their homes and property from which they have been displaced and uprooted and calls for their return”.¹⁰ In Resolution 35/169, 15 December 1980, the General Assembly reaffirmed “the inalienable right of the Palestinians to return to their homes and property in Palestine, from which they have been displaced and uprooted, and calls for their return”.¹¹

4.e.iii. As a matter of other areas of human rights law (human rights law generally is addressed further below)

21. Art. 12(4) of the ICCPR states that “[n]o one shall be arbitrarily deprived of the right to enter his own country”.¹²The term “his own country” is broad. It is not limited to a State where the individual has citizenship. For example, it has been understood to apply to “nationals of a country who have there been stripped of their nationality in violation of international law, and of individuals whose country of nationality has been incorporated in or transferred to another national entity, whose nationality is being denied to them”.¹³ Indeed, as the present Court held in the Nottebohm case, “nationality” is a relationship to a State more capacious than formal citizenship.¹⁴ It comprises factors such as an individual’s “family ties” and “attachment shown to him for a given country and inculcated in his children”.¹⁵ The term “enter” is broader than the term “return”, indicating that an individual need not have been present in historic Palestine in the past.¹⁶ Therefore, it is possible to “enter” one’s own country for the first time, indicating that Palestinian people who have never been to historic Palestine have the right to enter it.

22. Israel has the duty to ensure the right of return for Palestinian refugees on a non-discriminatory basis. According to Article 5(d)(ii) of the ICERD, States must ...eliminate racial discrimination in all its forms and to guarantee the right of everyone, without distinction as to race, colour, or national or ethnic origin, to equality before the law, notably in the enjoyment of ... [t]he right to leave any country, including one’s own, and to return to one’s country.¹⁷

5. The law on the use of force

23. The occupation is, in the terminology of international law, a ‘use of force’, and its existential legality therefore falls to be determined in part by the application of the law on the use of force (a.k.a. the jus ad bellum), including the prohibition on aggression.

6. The law of armed conflict (LOAC) including occupation law, including the prohibition on implanting settlements

24. The legality of the conduct of the occupation falls to be determined by the law of armed conflict (LOAC), also referred to as the jus in bello, international humanitarian law (IHL), and the laws of war, including the law of occupation. In the case of occupation law in particular, Israel is a party to the fourth Geneva Convention, and so is Jordan, Egypt, Lebanon, Syria and the State of Palestine.¹⁸ Whereas it is not party to the fourth 1907 Hague Convention, the present Court considered in the Wall Advisory Opinion, that “the provisions of the Hague Regulations have become part of customary law”.¹⁹

25. One key stipulation of occupation law relevant to the present case is the prohibition of implanting settlers into occupied territory. Under Article 49, paragraph 6 of the fourth Geneva Convention of 1949, “[t]he Occupying Power shall not deport or transfer parts of its own civilian population into the territory it occupies”.²⁰ In the words of the ICRC:

This means that international humanitarian law prohibits the establishment of settlements, as these are a form of population transfer into occupied territory. Any measure designed to expand or consolidate settlements is also illegal. Confiscation of land to build or expand settlements is similarly prohibited.²¹

26. The term ‘transfer’, therefore, includes settlement that is voluntary on the part of the individuals involved. In the Wall Advisory Opinion, the present Court observed that the provision prohibits not only deportations or forced transfers of population...but also any measures taken by an occupying Power in order to organize or encourage transfers of parts of its own population into the occupied territory.²²

27. The Security Council has urged “Israel, as the occupying Power, to abide scrupulously” by the Fourth Geneva Convention, and “to desist from taking any action which would alter the legal status, geographical nature, and demographic composition of the Arab territories occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, particularly refraining from transferring parts of its own civilian population into the occupied Arab territories.”²³

7. International human rights law (IHRL)

7.a. Generally, and applicability extraterritorially, and in times of war obligations apply to it extraterritorially in the OPT.²⁵ As also affirmed by the present Court in that Opinion, and in its earlier Nuclear Weapons Advisory Opinion and other decisions, these human rights obligations continue to operate in wartime situations, including occupations, alongside IHL.²⁶ As the UN Security Council stated in the context of the 1967 war that began Israel's occupation of the Palestinian Territory, "essential and inalienable human rights should be respected even in the vicissitudes of war".²⁷

7.b. Prohibitions on apartheid and racial discrimination more broadly

29. The prohibition of apartheid, and of racial discrimination more broadly,²⁸ is well-established under international law, both as a matter of treaty law and customary international law.

30. In 1966, the UN General Assembly passed Resolution 2202 (XXI), which condemned the policies of apartheid practiced by the Government of South Africa as a crime against humanity,²⁹ and in 1968 it reiterated this condemnation in Resolution 2396.³⁰

27 - SC Res. 14 ,237 June 1967, preamble, para. 2

28 - The prohibition of racial discrimination is enshrined primarily in ICERD, which defines "racial discrimination" as "any distinction, exclusion, restriction or preference based on race, colour, descent, or national or ethnic origin which has the purpose or effect of nullifying or impairing the recognition, enjoyment or exercise, on an equal footing, of human rights and fundamental freedoms in the political, economic, social, cultural or any other field of public life" (ICERD, Art. 1, para. 1). In General Recommendation 8, The Committee on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination ("CERD") affirmed that "such identification [as being members of a particular racial or ethnic group or groups] shall, if no justification exists to the contrary, be based on self-identification by the individual considered" (CERD, General Recommendation VIII, U.N. Doc. A/21 ,18/45 August 1990).

29 - GA Res. 2202 (XXI) A, 16 December 1966, para. 1.

30 GA Res. 2 ,2396 December 1968, para. 1. In 1963, the General Assembly had called for an end "without delay" to policies of racial segregation and apartheid in South Africa (GA Res. 1904 (XVIII), 20 November 1963, para. 5).

In 1980, the Security Council unanimously reaffirmed this condemnation and declared that apartheid is “a crime against mankind and is incompatible with the rights and dignity of man, the Charter of the United Nations, and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, and seriously disturbs international peace and security”,³¹ and in 1984 it reaffirmed that it is a crime against humanity.³² In the Namibia Advisory Opinion, the present Court ruled that the policy of apartheid in Namibia by South Africa constituted a “flagrant violation of the purposes and principles of the [UN] Charter”.³³

31. A prohibition of apartheid is contained in the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination (ICERD), to which both Israel and the State of Palestine are parties.³⁴ Article 3 of ICERD affirms that State Parties “condemn apartheid and undertake to prevent, prohibit and eradicate all such practices in their territories”.³⁵ In 1995, the Committee on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination (CERD) confirmed in General Recommendation 19 that Article 3 “prohibits all forms of racial segregation in all countries”.³⁶

32. The Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid (Apartheid Convention), to which the State of Palestine is a party, declares that apartheid is a crime against humanity and that “inhuman acts resulting from the policies and practices of apartheid and similar policies and practices of racial segregation and discrimination...are crimes violating the principles of international law”.³⁷ The Apartheid Convention defines the crime of apartheid as “similar policies and practices of racial segregation and discrimination as practised in southern Africa,” which include “inhuman acts committed for the purpose of establishing and maintaining domination by one racial group of persons over any other racial group of persons and systematically oppressing them”.³⁸

33. The Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court, to which the State of Palestine is a party, recognizes apartheid as a crime against humanity, giving rise to individual criminal liability.³⁹ The Rome Statute defines the crime of apartheid as “inhumane acts of a character similar to those in paragraph 1 [crimes against humanity], committed in the context of an institutionalized regime of systematic oppression and domination by one racial group over any other racial group or groups and committed with the intention of maintaining that regime”.⁴⁰

34. The Palestinian people constitute a distinct racial group for the purposes

38 - Apartheid Convention, Art. 2. Article 2 of the Convention outlines “inhuman acts” that may amount to apartheid, when committed systematically for the purpose of establishing or maintaining domination by one racial group over another, including murder; infliction of serious bodily or mental harm; subjecting them to torture or to cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment; imposition on a racial group or groups of living conditions calculated to cause its or their physical destruction in whole or in part; any legislative measures and other measures calculated to prevent a racial group or groups from participation in the political, social, economic and cultural life of the country and the deliberate creation of conditions preventing the full development of such a group or groups; any measures including legislative measures, designed to divide the population along racial lines by the creation of separate reserves and ghettos for the members of a racial group or groups, the prohibition of mixed marriages among members of various racial groups, the expropriation of landed property belonging to a racial group or groups or to members thereof; exploitation of the labour of the members of a racial group or groups; and exploitation of organizations and persons, by depriving them of fundamental rights and freedoms, because they oppose apartheid.

39 Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court, 1998, U.N. Doc. A/CONF.2187.9/183 UNTS 90, entered into force 1 July 2002 (“Rome Statute”), Art. 7. Earlier in 1968, the Convention on the Non-Applicability of Statutory Limitations to War Crimes and Crimes Against Humanity declared that “inhuman acts resulting from the policy of apartheid” are considered crimes against humanity (Convention on the Non-Applicability of Statutory Limitations to War Crimes and Crimes Against Humanity, 21 November 1968, 754 U.N.T.S. 73, Art. 1).

40 Rome Statute, Art. 7, para. 1(j). Acts enumerated in para. 1 of Article include: (a) murder; (b) extermination; (c) enslavement; (d) deportation or forcible transfer of population; (e) imprisonment or other severe deprivation of physical liberty in violation of fundamental rules of international law; (f) torture; (g) rape, sexual slavery, enforced prostitution, forced pregnancy, enforced sterilization, or any other of sexual violence of comparable gravity; (h) persecution against any identifiable group or collectivity on political, racial, national, ethnic, cultural, religious, gender... or other grounds that are universally recognized as impermissible under international law, in connection with any act referred to in this paragraph or any crime within the jurisdiction of the Court; (i) enforced disappearance of persons; (j) the crime of apartheid; (k) other inhumane acts of a similar character intentionally causing great suffering, or serious injury to body or to mental or physical health (Rome Statute, Art. 7, para. 1).

of the apartheid definition under international law.⁴¹ In its definition of racial discrimination, article 1 of the ICERD clarifies that “race” is not the sole indicator of racial discrimination, but that it may cover “any distinction, exclusion, restriction or preference based on race, colour, descent, or national or ethnic origin”.⁴² CERD General Recommendation VIII further affirms that the identification of individuals as being members of a particular racial or ethnic group “shall, if no justification exists to the contrary, be based on self-identification...”⁴³ In international criminal law, multiple international criminal tribunals have used a similar approach in addressing the definition of “racial group” in the context of genocide, persecution, and other war crimes based on harms perpetrated by one racial group against another. For example, in Rutaganda, the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda (ICTR) held that group membership under the Genocide Convention was to be understood as “a subjective rather than an objective concept” where “the victim is perceived by the perpetrator as belonging to a group slated for destruction”.⁴⁴ In Blagojević and Jokić, the International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia (ICTY) held that “a national, ethnical, racial or religious group is identified by using as criterion the stigmatisation of the group, notably by the perpetrators of the crime, on the basis of its perceived national, ethnical, racial or religious characteristics”.⁴⁵

8. Special status of certain rules: jus cogens/non-derogable/peremptory obligations; erga omnes/community obligations

8.a. Jus cogens/non-derogable/peremptory obligations

35. As already indicated in relation to self-determination, some of the foregoing rules of international law have jus cogens/peremptory status. They occupy a higher normative position compared to other rules of international law.⁴⁶

36. The position of certain norms in this category has two consequences:

(1) In the first place, as indicated, insofar as there is any contradiction between rules with this status, and other rules that lack this status, the rules with this status prevail.⁴⁷

(2) In the second place, because of their fundamental character, special obligations exist on the part of all States to ensure that these rules are not violated in any given instance. This is relevant to the ‘legal consequences’ for other States of their violation by Israel, addressed below in Part 4.

8.b. Erga omnes/community obligations

37. Some of the foregoing rules of international law operate erga omnes, against all. Erga omnes rights are those which are opposable to all States. This is not simply a matter of legal norms operating universally—that would be a characteristic of all areas of generally-applicable law. Rather, it denotes a sub-set of generally-applicable law, where in any given situation, not only do those directly affected by compliance with the particular legal norm at issue, as rights holders, have a legitimate interest in the matter of this compliance. Also, all States are understood to have a legitimate interest in compliance in this case, since such compliance constitutes a community interest that all are thereby implicated in. There is thus a legal link between compliance with an erga omnes right/obligation in any given situation, and the position of all States, even though these other States do not have their direct rights affected by the compliance at issue. In the Barcelona Traction decision that is the origin of this concept, the present Court stated that erga omnes obligations are “the concern of all States”⁴⁸ and that “all States can be held to have a legal interest in their protection.”⁴⁹ Thus, in any instance where such obligations are violated, all States have a legal interest at stake, not just the State(s), whose rights are being violated. Like the second consequence of jus cogens status, this feature of erga omnes norms is relevant to the ‘legal consequences’ for other States of their violation by Israel, addressed below in Part 4.

8.c. Why rules of international law have these two special forms of status; relationship between the two forms; which rules are covered.

38. Obligations have jus cogens and erga omnes status because they are regarded to be of fundamental importance. The ILC study on the former category of obligations has suggested that all obligations that have this status also have the latter status;⁵⁰ additional obligations may exist that have the latter status and lack the former status.⁵¹

39. For present purposes, it is sufficient to focus on rules that have both jus cogens and erga omnes status. These are:

49 - Ibid., again affirmed by the Court in Wall Advisory Opinion (2004), p. 199, para. 155. In the Chagos Advisory Opinion, the Court stated that “all States have a legal interest in protecting” an erga omnes right (Legal Consequences of the Separation of the Chagos Archipelago from Mauritius in 1965, Advisory Opinion, I.C.J. Reports 2019, p. 95 at p. 139, para. 180). In the East Timor case, the Court cited Portugal’s argument, that because the right in question had erga omnes status, “accordingly Portugal could require it [Australia, the State that, it was argued, had breached the right by entering into an agreement with Indonesia which was predicated on Indonesia’s violation of the right], to respect” the right, but dismissed this possibility being realized through the case before it, for jurisdictional reasons [Indonesia had not consented to the Court’s adjudication of the legality of its actions] (East Timor (Portugal v. Australia), Judgment, I.C.J. Reports 1995, p. 90 at p. 102, para. 29). The ILC Commentary on ARSIWA describes the concept of erga omnes obligations as addressing “the legal interest of all States in compliance – i.e., ...in being entitled to invoke the responsibility of any State in breach” (ARSIWA, Part Two, Ch. III, Art. 39 Commentary, para. 7).

(2) The prohibition on the use of force that is not legally justified in international law, and is aggression, including when force is used to purportedly acquire title over, aka ‘annex’, territory.⁵³

(3) Some of the core protections of human rights in addition to self-determination, including as a matter of IHL and IHRL.⁵⁴ In particular:

III, Art. 40 Commentary, para. 5; ILC jus cogens Draft Conclusions & Commentaries, Conclusion 23, Annex; Human Rights Council Res. 28/49 of 11 April 2022, Right of the Palestinian people to self-determination, U.N. Benin, Application no. 2018/028, Judgment, African Court of Human and Peoples’ Rights (“ACTHPR”), 22 September 2022, para. 289. On it having erga omnes status, see East Timor Judgment (1995), p. 102, para. 29; Wall Advisory Opinion (2004), p. 172-171, para. 88 and p.199, paras. 156-155; Chagos Advisory Opinion (2019), p. 139, para. 180, and the fact that it has jus cogens status (which according to the ILC study means it also has erga omnes status).

53 - On the prohibition on the use of force that is not legally justified in international law, and is therefore aggression, having jus cogens status, see ARSIWA, Part One, Ch. IV, Art. 26 Commentary, para. 5, and Part Two, Ch. III, Art. 40 Commentary, para. 4; ILC jus cogens Draft Conclusions & Commentaries, Conclusion 23, Annex; Military and Paramilitary Activities in and against Nicaragua (Nicaragua v. United States of America), Merits, Judgment, I.C.J. Reports, 1986, p. 14 at p. 90, para. 190; Barcelona Traction Judgment (1970), p. 33, para. 34; Friendly Relations and Co-operation Declaration (1970). On it having erga omnes status see the fact that it has jus cogens status (which according to the ILC study means it also has erga omnes status). On the particular prohibition of the use of force to purportedly acquire title over/annex territory having jus cogens status, see, e.g., Human Rights Council Res. 11 28/49 April 2022, Preamble, para. 7, characterizing the “prohibition of the acquisition of territory by force” as a breach of a peremptory norm of international law; Furundžija Trial Chamber Judgment (1988), para. 147.

54 - In the context of erga omnes obligations, the Court in Barcelona Traction referred to “the principles and rules concerning the basic rights of the human person” (Barcelona Traction Judgment (1970), p. 32, para. 34).

prohibition on implanting settlements onto occupied land.⁵⁵

• The prohibition of crimes against humanity.⁵⁶

55 - On the core/basic protective rules of IHL having jus cogens status, see ILC jus cogens Draft Conclusions & Commentaries, Conclusion 23, Annex, and the fact that the present Court referred to them in the Nuclear Weapons Advisory Opinion as “intransgressible” (see below in the present note), leading the ILC ARSIWA Commentary to observe that “[i]n the light of the description by ICJ of the basic rules of international humanitarian law applicable in armed conflict as “intransgressible” in character, it would also seem justified to treat these as peremptory” (ARSIWA, Part Two, Ch. III, Art. 40 Commentary, para. 7). On such rules having erga omnes status see the fact that they have jus cogens status (which, as indicated, according to the ILC study means they also have erga omnes status). In the Wall Advisory Opinion, the Court stated that “With regard to international humanitarian law, the Court recalls that in its Advisory Opinion on the Legality of the Threat or Use of Nuclear Weapons it stated that “a great many rules of humanitarian law applicable in armed conflict are so fundamental to the respect of the human person and ‘elementary considerations of humanity’ . . .”, that they are “to be observed by all States whether or not they have ratified the conventions that contain them, because they constitute intransgressible principles of international customary law” (Nuclear Weapons Advisory Opinion (1996), p. 257, para. 79). In the Court’s view, these rules incorporate obligations which are essentially of an erga omnes character” (Wall Advisory Opinion (2004), p. 199, para. 157). As to which protective rules are ‘core/basic’ and therefore have jus cogens and erga omnes status, notably the present Court referred ‘a great many’ rules of IHL. Certainly, they include, and are not limited to, rules which, if violated, are classified as ‘serious violations’ of IHL and ‘war crimes’ (the terms being used interchangeably) by the ICRC. Such a classification includes rules which, if violated, constitute ‘grave breaches’ of the four Geneva Conventions and Protocol I. And, also, insofar as this makes a difference (supplementing the coverage of grave breaches in the aforementioned treaties in general, and for those states who are not a party to one or more of them, as with Israel and Protocol I), breaches classified as ‘war crimes’ in the Rome Statute and customary international law. See ICRC, “What are “serious violations of international humanitarian law”? Explanatory Note”, <https://www.icrc.org/en/doc/assets/files/2012/att-what-are-serious-violations-of-ihl-icrc.pdf>. Note that the ICRC emphasises that ‘serious violations’ is a wider category of violations than those violations that constitute ‘grave breaches’ (See ICRC, Updated Commentary on GC III (2020), Art. 130 Commentary, para. 5173). The prohibition of implanting settlements in occupied land falls into this ‘core/basic’ category and, within this, into the ‘serious violations’ category. This is illustrated by, but not exclusively based on, the fact that a breach of this prohibition is included in the ‘grave breaches’ category of Protocol I, and as a ‘war crime’ in the Rome Statute. See Protocol I, Art. 48(5)(a), and Rome Statute, Art. 8, para. 2(b)(viii). It is also notable that, as explained herein, implanting settlements in the territory of a self-determination unit is also a breach of the right of external self-determination. That right exists in customary international law and itself has jus cogens and erga omnes status. Given that it is, to borrow the phrase of the Court to describe the ‘intransgressible’ rules of IHL, “fundamental to the respect of the human person [on an individual and a collective level] and ‘elementary considerations of humanity’”, it follows that the prohibition of implanting settlements shares this characteristic as an essential element of it.

- The prohibition of apartheid.⁵⁸
- The prohibition of slavery.⁵⁹

57 - On the prohibition on racial discrimination generally having jus cogens status, see ARSIWA, Part One, Ch. IV, Art. 26 Commentary, para. 5 and Part Two, Ch. III, Art. 40 Commentary, para. 4; ILC jus cogens Draft Conclusions & Commentaries, Conclusion 23, Annex; Juridical Condition and Rights of Undocumented Migrants, Advisory Opinion OC03/18- of 17 September 2003, IACtHR, para. 101; Furundžija Trial Chamber Judgment (1988), para. 147. On it having erga omnes status, see Barcelona Traction Judgment (1970), p. 32, para. 34 and the fact that it has jus cogens status (which, as indicated, according to the ILC study means it also has erga omnes status). Article 6 of the ICERD obliges States Parties to “assure to everyone within their jurisdiction effective protection and remedies, through the competent national tribunals and other State institutions, against any acts of racial discrimination which violate his human rights and fundamental freedoms contrary to this Convention, as well as the right to seek from such tribunals just and adequate reparation or satisfaction for any damage suffered as a result of such discrimination”. The CERD Committee has confirmed that this contains the obligation to investigate and prosecute acts of racial discrimination, see L.K. v. Netherlands, Communication No. 1991/4, CERD, U.N. Doc. A/18/48, paras. 6.6-6.4 (interpreting Art. 4 of the ICERD).

58 - On the prohibition of apartheid having jus cogens status, see ARSIWA, Part Two, Ch. III, Art. 40 Commentary, para. 4; ILC jus cogens Draft Conclusions & Commentaries, Conclusion 23, Annex; Obligations of a State that has Denounced the ACHR

IACtHR Advisory Opinion (2020), para. 105. On it having erga omnes status, see the fact that it has jus cogens status (which, as indicated, according to the ILC study means it also has erga omnes status). Article IV of the Apartheid Convention obliges States to “supress as well as to prevent any encouragement of the crime of apartheid” and to “prosecute, bring to trial and punish and punish in accordance with their jurisdiction persons responsible for, or accused of, the acts defined in article II of the present Convention, whether or not such persons reside in the territory of the State in which the acts are committed or are nationals of that State or of some other State or are stateless persons” (Apartheid Convention, Art. IV).

III, Art. 40 Commentary, para. 4 (slavery and slave trade); ILC jus cogens Draft Conclusions & Commentaries, Conclusion 23, Annex (slavery only); Obligations of a State that has Denounced the ACHR IACtHR Advisory Opinion (2020), para. 105; Furundžija Trial Chamber Judgment (1988), para. 147. On the prohibition of slavery having erga omnes status, see Barcelona Traction Judgment (1970), p. 32, para. 34, and the fact that it has jus cogens status (which, as indicated, according to the ILC study means it also has erga omnes status).

PART 3: ILLEGALITY AND LEGAL STATUS OF THE OCCUPATION

9. Introduction and summary

40. This Part clarifies what the terms ‘legal’/‘illegal’ mean, according to the relevant, multiple areas of applicable international law. It explains how the different forms of ‘legality’/ ‘illegality’ relate to each other, and how they apply to the occupation.

60 - On the prohibition of genocide having jus cogens status, see ILC jus cogens Draft Conclusions & Commentaries, Conclusion 23, Annex; ARSIWA, Part One, Ch. IV, Art. 26 Commentary, para. 5 and Part Two, Ch. III, Art. 40 Commentary, para. 4;

Reports 1996, p. 595 at p. 616-615, para. 31; Obligations of a State that has Denounced the ACHR IACtHR Advisory Opinion (2020), para. 105; Furundžija Trial Chamber Judgment (1988), para. 147; Kupreškić Trial Chamber Judgment (2000), para. 520. On it having erga omnes status see the fact that it has jus cogens status (which, as indicated, according to the ILC study means it also has erga omnes status). Article I of the Genocide Convention obliges States Parties to prevent genocide, whereas Article VI obliges States Parties to prosecute acts of genocide.

61 - On the prohibition of torture having jus cogens status, see ILC jus cogens Draft Conclusions & Commentaries, Conclusion 23, Annex; ARSIWA, Part One, Ch. IV, Art. 26 Commentary para. 5; Questions Relating to the Obligation to Prosecute or Extradite (Belgium v. Senegal), Judgment, I.C.J. Reports 2012, p. 422 at p. 457, para. 99; Furundžija Trial Chamber Judgment (1988), para. 147, and the fact that it is a non-derogable right in human rights treaties. On it having erga omnes status see the fact that it has jus cogens status (which, as indicated, according to the ILC study means it also has erga omnes status); Furundžija Trial Chamber Judgment (1988), para. 151. Article 7 of the Convention Against Torture reads, “The State Party in the territory under whose jurisdiction a person alleged to have committed any offence referred to in article 4 is found shall in the cases contemplated in article 5, if it does not extradite him, submit the case to its competent authorities for the purpose of prosecution”. This Court held that Article 7 of the Convention Against Torture obliges all States to prosecute acts of torture when the perpetrator is within the territory (Belgium v. Senegal Judgment (2012), pp. 457-456, p. paras. 99-95).

62 - On the prohibition of cruel, inhuman and degrading treatment and punishment having jus cogens status, see Obligations of a State that has Denounced the ACHR IACtHR Advisory Opinion (2020), para. 106 and sources cited therein, note. 155; Al-Adsani v. The United Kingdom, Application No. 97/35763, Judgment, ECtHR, 21 November 2001, para. 59, and the and the fact that it is a non-derogable right in human rights treaties. On it having erga omnes status see the fact that it has jus cogens status (which, as indicated, according to the ILC study means it also has erga omnes status).

41. As to existential legality/illegality, the occupation, simply by virtue of exercising control over the West Bank (including East Jerusalem) and Gaza, and consequently preventing the Palestinian people from full and effective self-governance, constitutes a fundamental impediment to the realization of the right of self-determination of the Palestinian people enshrined in international law.

42. As the occupation is a use of force, the legality of its existence falls to be determined according to the jus ad bellum. The only permissible justification for the occupation in the jus ad bellum is through a right of self-defence.

43. Israel's use of force against Egypt, Jordan and Syria in 1967 was not a legally valid exercise of a right to self-defence, and the occupation of the Palestinian Territory, under Egyptian and Jordanian administration up until that point, was, therefore, a part of an unlawful use of force. Thus, the occupation was itself an illegal use of force, an aggression, from the outset. As a result, there is no valid international law basis for the existence of the occupation.

44. The occupation's existential illegality stems from its lack of legal basis as a system of control, compounded by its prolonged duration, annexation efforts, and severe abuses against Palestinians. The use of military force to annex territory constitutes aggression and a violation of international law. The occupation's abusive nature aggravates its illegality, and any annexations have no legal effect. Israel cannot claim sovereignty over the occupied Palestinian territories, including East Jerusalem, through forceful control. The occupation is an ongoing international wrongful act, requiring immediate and unconditional termination.

45. As to the illegality of the conduct of the occupation, there are multiple, egregious breaches of the relevant areas of applicable international law: self-determination including the right to return; IHL including occupation law; international human rights law generally, and, within this, the prohibition of racial discrimination generally and the prohibition of apartheid in particular, and the prohibition of torture and cruel, inhuman and degrading treatment and punishment.

46. The occupation is thus illegal in both its existence and its conduct.

47. All the main areas of international law violated—the prohibition on the use of force other than in self-defence/the prohibition of aggression; the right of self-determination; the prohibition of racial discrimination generally and apartheid in particular; the core/basic protections of IHL; the prohibition of torture and cruel, inhuman and degrading treatment and punishment—have jus cogens and erga omnes status.

10. Existential legality/illegality 1: Significance of the right of external self-determination

48. The right of Palestinian self-determination in international law, and the necessary consequence of this, that the Palestinian people should be able to exercise the right, free of Israeli control, is near-universally accepted.

49. The occupation is existentially illegal under the law of self-determination, as it prevents the Palestinian people's realization of their entitlement to self-determination. While aggravating factors such as settler-colonialism, apartheid, and abuses further impact its legality, the core denial of Palestinian self-determination by the occupation itself is sufficient to deem it illegal.

11. Existential legality/illegality 2: Annexation, including 'de facto' annexation.

11.a. Meaning of annexation

50. In international law, 'annexation' represents a situation of purported acquisition of territory by force. Whereas occupation is, by definition, temporary and without prejudice to the legal status of the territory concerned, the aim of annexation is to exercise permanent dominion and sovereignty over that territory, thereby altering its legal status. This is illegal in international law.

11.b. Areas where Israel has purported to annex territory – East Jerusalem and other areas of the West Bank

51. For various reasons, notably Israel’s extension of its national law to apply to East Jerusalem (e.g., the Basic Law of 1980), Israel has purported to annex that territory.

52. This constitutes two separate violations of international law concerned with the existential legality of the occupation:

(1) Israel’s attempt to assert sovereignty is a violation of its legal obligations to respect the right of self-determination of the Palestinian people and the sovereignty of the State of Palestine.

(2) Because it has been enabled and is maintained through the use of military force, and according to the law on the use of force, the annexation of territory is not a legally valid basis for using military force, Israel’s use of force in order to annex East Jerusalem is a violation of the international law on the use of force. As the General Assembly observed in the Friendly Relations and Co-operation Declaration, “the territory of a State shall not be the object of acquisition by another State resulting from the threat or use of force”.⁶³ Thus, in the context of the occupation of the Palestinian Territory in 1970, the General Assembly stated that “the acquisition of territories by force is inadmissible”.⁶⁴

53. The same logic applies to any other parts of the Occupied Palestinian Territory where purported annexation has happened or may happen in the future.

11.c. ‘de facto’ annexation

11.c.i. What is ‘de facto’ annexation?

54. It is sometimes said that Israel is practising ‘de facto’ annexation in the West

63 - Friendly Relations and Co-operation Declaration (1970).

64 - GA Res. 2628 (XXV), 4 November 1970, para. 1.

Bank. This means the exercise of control over the West Bank on one or both of the following bases:

(1) The occupation involves "performing sovereignty" without formally claiming it, such as monopolizing the legitimate use of violence and enabling Israeli settlers to live on the land, believing it to be part of Israel. Legally, this can be understood as a distinction between "sovereignty-as-administration" (control in practice) and "sovereignty-as-title" (legal ownership), where the former exists without the latter in this case.

(2) In the second place, establishing 'facts on the ground' through control and implanting settlers that could then pave the way for the eventual declaration of de jure sovereignty over the land in question. It is perhaps this meaning of de facto annexation that the present Court was invoking when it held that the construction of the wall and its associated régime create a "fait accompli" on the ground that could well become permanent, in which case ... it would be tantamount to de facto annexation.⁶⁵

11.c.ii. Illegality

55. Implanting settlers on occupied land is in and of itself, including as a form of de facto annexation understood as a performance of sovereignty/'sovereignty-as-administration' only and/or as a means of establishing facts on the ground to enable territorial acquisition, a violation of occupation law and the law of self-determination. The prohibition here is a general one, however, not specific to any kind of de facto annexation context.

56. Occupying non-sovereign territory as a form of de facto annexation understood as a performance of sovereignty/'sovereignty-as-administration'-only and/or as a means of establishing facts on the ground to enable territorial acquisition is not a valid international legal basis for conducting such a military occupation according to the international law on the use of force. In consequence, as with de jure purported annexation, occupation for these reasons is:

(1) a violation of Israel’s legal obligation to respect the sovereignty of the State of Palestine and a violation of Israel’s legal obligation to respect the right of self-determination of the Palestinian people;

(2) a violation of Israel’s obligations in the international law on the use of force.

11.d. Why the violation of self-determination involved in the occupation goes beyond the issue of annexation

57. The foregoing determinations about the illegality of the occupation are necessarily specific to its link to annexation. The control Israel exercises over territory on the basis of purported annexation is unlawful on this basis — since Israel cannot annex territory in this way, the purported annexation has not been legally effective, and thus Israel has no valid legal basis to control the territory on the basis that it is the sovereign. The control Israel exercises over the West Bank on the basis of ‘de facto’ annexation as defined above is also legally invalid, since international law does not permit a State to use force to control the territory of a self-determination unit (and also, in this case, a State) for these purposes.

58. The Palestinian right to freedom from occupation, rooted in self-determination, extends beyond the specific issue of annexation. The core issue is the occupation itself as a system of control, regardless of its purpose. While the analysis addresses some aspects of existential illegality, it does not provide a comprehensive treatment of the matter.

12. Existential legality/illegality 3: The occupation as a form of self-defence; the relevance of Security Council Resolution 242

12.a. Ostensible security-basis for the occupation and the applicable framework of international law

59. Some accept the Palestinian right to self-determination and the implications for the occupation's illegality but hesitate to conclude that the occupation must end immediately. This position often stems from the belief that Israel should maintain the occupation for security reasons or that its end should be contingent on a peace agreement providing security guarantees for Israel.

60. Does international law permit Israel to maintain the occupation, notwithstanding the necessary impediment this causes to the realization of self-determination by the Palestinian people, on this basis?

61. The Israeli occupation of Palestinian territory, including Gaza, constitutes a military occupation and, under international law, a "use of force," akin to war. Despite Israel withdrawing its ground forces from Gaza in 2005, it maintains control through methods such as a siege, control of airspace and maritime territory, and the ability to reintroduce ground troops. This ongoing situation, supplemented by military incursions and missile strikes, represents continuous use of force under international law.

62. The only legal grounds for a State being entitled to control territory that does not form part of its sovereign territory, and which is either the territory of another State, or a non-State self-determination unit, through the use of force in the foregoing way, is if one or more of the following are present: (a) the host sovereign entity has validly given its permission; (b) the UN Security Council has given its authority for this under Chapter VII of the UN Charter; (c) it is a legally-valid exercise of self-defence according to the international law on the use of force. Such grounds do not exist in relation to Israel's occupation of the Palestinian Territory.

12.b. Security Council Resolution 242 (1967)

63. In Resolution 242 of 1967, the United Nations Security Council affirmed that:

...the fulfilment of Charter principles requires the establishment of a just and lasting peace in the Middle East which should include the application of both the following principles: (i) Withdrawal of Israel armed forces from territories occupied in the recent conflict (ii) Termination of all claims or states of belligerency and respect for and acknowledgment of the sovereignty, territorial integrity, and political independence of every State in the area and their right to live in peace within secure and recognized boundaries free from threats or acts of force.⁶⁶

64. By invoking the withdrawal of occupation forces—i.e., the end of the occupation—in the context of a “just and lasting peace”, is the Security Council stipulating that the occupation can continue until there is a “just and lasting peace”—perhaps in the form of a peace agreement—which, moreover, must include a resolution of/provision for the matters set out in the second paragraph? And, if so, did this stipulation provide legal grounds for the occupation to continue from 1967? The answer to both these questions is no.

65. The Council merely stated that a "just and lasting peace" would require both an end to the occupation and the resolution of all matters outlined in the second paragraph. This does not imply that the occupation can continue until a "just and lasting peace" is achieved, which includes the resolution of all these matters. In other words, the absence of any of the elements of a "just and lasting peace" does not justify the continuation of the occupation. That would be a logical fallacy.

66. Security Council Resolution 242 therefore provides no legal basis for the existence or continuation of the occupation.

12.c. Self-defence

67. The use of force in self-defence (reason (c) above) is only legally permitted

according to the international law on the use of force—the jus ad bellum—if there is an actual or imminent threat of an armed attack, and the use of force involved—here, a military occupation—is necessary and proportionate to that attack/imminent threat of attack.

68. In 1967, there was no actual or imminent threat of armed attack that justified the use of force, including the occupation, in self-defense. Israel’s use of force at that time, which resulted in the occupation, lacked a valid basis in international law. Consequently, the occupation has been illegal from the outset, constituting an aggression and an unlawful use of force under the law on the use of force.

69. For the sake of hypothetical argument, the present submission will address the alternative starting position in 1967, which, as indicated, the submission rejects, that Israel had a valid legal right to use force in 1967 in self-defence, and a further hypothetical argument (which is moot if there was no valid legal right to self-defence in the first place), that the introduction of the occupation was necessary and proportionate in legal terms.

70. The requirement to justify the use of force, including military occupation, applies continuously, not just during the initial invasion. The occupation itself is an ongoing use of force, and its legality depends on meeting the ad bellum test: there must be an actual or imminent threat of armed attack, and the force used—such as occupation—must be necessary and proportionate. If this test is not met, the occupation is illegal. The question is whether the occupation meets this test.

71. If one accepts that Israel had the legal right to use force in 1967 for self-defense during active hostilities with Egypt, Jordan, and Syria, this justification would have expired once hostilities ended. After that point, there was no longer an imminent threat justifying continued force, and Israel had no lawful basis to maintain the occupation. From that moment, the occupation became an unlawful use of force, constituting aggression.

72. The occupation serves, in part, to prevent the creation of a fully autonomous Palestinian state at Israel's borders, driven by security concerns. Additionally, the use of force in the West Bank is sometimes framed as self-defense against threats to settlements. However, preventative self-defense is not recognized as a valid justification for the use of force under international law, meaning the occupation cannot be legally justified on these grounds.

73. The use of force to protect Israeli settlers, even from imminent attacks, is legally invalid due to the extraterritorial and illegal nature of the settlements. International law does not allow the use of force to defend nationals outside a state's territory. Protection of settlers could be achieved by ending their illegal presence in the West Bank and East Jerusalem.

12.d. Conclusion—the occupation is an illegal use of force, an aggression

74. The effect of the foregoing analysis in this section is that there is no lawful basis for Israel to maintain the occupation or, put differently, to lawfully impede the Palestinian right of self-determination through maintaining the occupation. In consequence, the occupation of Gaza and the West Bank (including East Jerusalem) is existentially illegal as a breach of the international law on the use of force and the law of self-determination.

75. The nature of the breach of the international law on the use of force covered in the previous paragraph is such as to meet the definition of 'aggression' in international law. The term 'aggression' is usually as a synonym for a breach of the international law on the use of force, and, occasionally, a sub-set of such breaches that are of a particular grave nature. Insofar as the latter definition is concerned, the breach here meets and exceeds the threshold. It meets it with the existence of an unlawful, in jus ad bellum terms, occupation (the UN General Assembly has affirmed that an occupation can be an aggression). It then exceeds it through the aggravating factors of a link to annexation, prolonged duration and egregiously abusive conduct. The individual crime of aggression in the Rome Statute for the International Criminal Court is limited to aggression which because of its “character, gravity and scale constitutes a manifest violation of the Charter of the United Nations”.⁶⁷ For the same reasons that the breach of international law here falls within the (occasionally-used) definition of aggression covering a sub-set of breaches of the law on the use of force, the illegal nature of the use of force meets this Rome Statute definition of the individual crime of aggression.

13. Illegality of the conduct of the occupation

13.a. Overview

76. There have been and continues to be widespread violations of self-determination, other areas of international human rights law, and IHL, including occupation law, by Israel in its conduct of the occupation in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, and the Gaza Strip. These have included violations of the core/basic protective norms of IHL, torture and cruel, inhuman and degrading treatment and punishment, racial discrimination generally, and apartheid in particular. Thus, the conduct of the occupation involves violations of the following norms of international law that have jus cogens and erga omnes status:

- (1) The right of self-determination.
- (2) The prohibition of apartheid.
- (3) The core/basic protective rules of IHL, including the prohibition of implanting of settlers on occupied land.
- (4) The prohibition of racial discrimination generally.

⁶⁷ Rome Statute, Art. 8bis, para. 1

(5) The prohibition of torture and cruel, inhuman and degrading treatment and punishment.

This has been widely documented, including by various United Nations bodies, the evidence of which having been submitted to the Court by the United Nations in the present proceedings.⁶⁸

77. These include violations arising out of positive actions by Israeli agents, including soldiers, as well as the failure to protect the Palestinian people from harm perpetrated against them by Israeli settlers. Israel's behaviour in East Jerusalem, acting as the sovereign when it is not, violates those areas of occupation law which rule out such behaviour, notably the prohibition on altering the existing domestic law unless absolutely prevented, which Israel's purported extension of its own national legal system over the area amounts to an egregious violation of.

78. Rights violations, which breach IHL and IHRL, have been and are widespread and cover the full spectrum of rights, in terms of civil and political rights (e.g., the right to life; freedom from torture and cruel, inhuman and degrading treatment and punishment; freedom of movement) and economic, social and cultural rights (e.g. the rights to housing, education, and cultural heritage).

13.b. Violations of freedom of expression, association, and assembly in particular

79. Israel violates the freedom of expression, association, and assembly of the Palestinian people through policies and practices that target the individual exercise of civil and political rights, and the activities of Palestinian civil society organizations. For example, the Israeli military occupation forces enacted several military orders that criminalize peaceful expressions of opposition to the occupation, displays of Palestinian flags or political symbols, any “act or omission which entails harm, damage, disturbance to the security of the area or of the Israeli Defense Forces,” in addition to a wide range of vaguely defined so-called security offences.⁶⁹ The suppression of Palestinian freedom of expression, association, and assembly has intensified in recent years, culminating in the 2021 criminalization of six prominent Palestinian civil society and human rights organizations – Al-Haq, Addameer Prisoner Support and Human Rights Association, Bisan Center for Research and Development, Defense for Children International-Palestine (DCIP), Union of Agricultural Work Committees, and Union of Palestinian Women’s Committees.⁷⁰ The Israeli designation, without evidence, of these civil society organizations as “terrorist groups”—which was rejected by the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights and UN human rights mandate holders, EU

In 2010, the Israeli military commander in the West Bank enacted Military Order No. 1651 of 2009, which consolidated a number of previously issued orders into an integrated “criminal code” that defines security offenses and governs criminal procedures in Israeli military courts in the West Bank. The Order has been amended several times, with the up-to-date Hebrew version available at https://www.nevo.co.il/law_html/law027_666/65.htm.

70 - On October 2021 ,22, the Israeli Defense Minister declared six Palestinian civil society organizations (Addameer Prisoner Support and Human Rights Association, Al-Haq, Bisan Center for Research and Development, Defense for Children International-Palestine (DCIP), Union of Agricultural Work Committees, and Union of Palestinian Women’s Committees) unlawful under the 2016 Israeli Counterterrorism Act (Designations No. 376-371, Israeli Minister of Defense, 19 October 2021, <https://nbctf.mod.gov.il/en/Pages/211021EN.aspx>). Two weeks later, the Israeli military commander in the West Bank declared them “illegitimate in accordance with defense regulations” (Declarations 3 ,11794-11790 November 2021); see also Union of Palestinian Women’s Committees, <https://upwc.org.ps>.

governments, and rights organizations in Israel and around the world⁷¹—has had a devastating impact on the freedom of expression and assembly, and the exercise of civil and political rights, of the Palestinian people.⁷² Earlier, in January 2021, Israel had designated the Palestinian Health Work Committees, a key provider of healthcare services in the West Bank, as a terrorist group.⁷³ In 2022, the UN Human Rights Committee noted with concern the use by Israel of terrorism legislation to “oppress and criminalize legitimate political or humanitarian acts”, in addition to other measures aimed at targeting the exercise of free expression, such as residency revocations and denial of entry into Israel.⁷⁴ Specifically, the Human Rights Committee stated that it was “deeply concerned” at the declaration of the six Palestinian civil society organization as “unlawful” and the designation of them as “terrorist organizations”, describing this as “serious restrictions on the right of freedom of expression”.⁷⁵

13.c. Settlements

80. The present Court held in the Wall Advisory Opinion that:

Israel has conducted a policy and developed practices involving the establishment of settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, contrary to the terms of Article 49 paragraph 6 [of GCIV].⁷⁶

The General Assembly has held that Israel's establishment of settlements in the OPT "constitutes a flagrant violation under international law and a major obstacle to the achievement of the two-State solution and a just, lasting and comprehensive peace".⁷⁷ The Security Council considered that "the policy of Israel in establishing settlements in the occupied Arab territories...constitutes a violation" of the Fourth Geneva Convention.⁷⁸ The Council also determined that, in the context of Israel's measures to "change the physical character, demographic composition, institutional structure or status of the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem" that

Israel's policy and practices of settling parts of its population and new immigrants in those territories constitute a flagrant violation of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War and also constitute a serious obstruction to achieving a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the Middle East.⁷⁹

13.d. Self-determination more broadly

81. Israel violates the Palestinian right to self-determination by restricting their ability to participate in self-government and maintain a functioning civil society.

76 - Wall Advisory Opinion (2004), pp. 184-183, para. 120.

77 - GA Res. 23 ,2334 December 2016, para. 1.

78 - SC Res. 20 ,(1979) 452 July 1979, preamble.

79 - SC Res. 1 ,(1980) 465 March 1980, para. 5.

This includes violations of the right to return, freedom of movement, residence, and religious freedom by preventing Palestinians from freely traveling between Gaza, the West Bank, and East Jerusalem. Religious freedom is particularly impacted by restrictions on access to holy sites, such as the Al-Aqsa Mosque in Jerusalem and the Ibrahimi Mosque in Hebron, with both territorial and site-specific access limitations.

82. The occupation's harmful and abusive conduct systematically violates various areas of international law, severely affecting the continued existence of the Palestinian people in the occupied territories. This undermines the right of self-determination and the sovereign rights of the State of Palestine, as it directly attacks the essential relationship between the Palestinian people and their land, which is necessary for realizing these rights.

83. An example of how Israel's harmful and abusive practices have this effect is the implanting, existence and maintenance of settlements and their associated supportive infrastructure including separate roads providing essential direct links to Israel, environmental harm, and natural resource use. In addition to violating the specific legal prohibition in occupation law, as indicated above, this practice constitutes a violation of the legal right of self-determination because of its essentially colonial nature and effect. The commentary to GC IV Article 49 indicates that the provision

...is intended to prevent a practice adopted during the Second World War by certain Powers, which transferred portions of their own population to occupied territory for political and racial reasons or in order, as they claimed, to colonize those territories. Such transfers worsened the economic situation of the native population and endangered their separate existence as a race.⁸⁰

The foregoing considerations indicate that settlements violate the legal right of the Palestinian people to self-determination, and the related sovereign rights of the State of Palestine, because of the following factors:

80 - GC IV, Art. 49 Commentary, para. 6.

(1) They involve taking land from the Palestinian people and/or the State of Palestine

(2) They alter the demographic composition of Palestine to reduce, proportionately, the number of Palestinian people living there.

(3) They are established and operate (e.g. the connecting settler-only roads to Israel, enabling people to commute to work there) on the basis of a claim by the individuals involved, linked to their identity as Israelis, that the territory where they live is the land of Israel, and not, therefore, the territory of the Palestinian people as a self-determination unit and the sovereign territory of the State of Palestine.

84. When considering the settlements in the context of the construction of the wall, the present Court held that the route chosen for the wall gave expression in loco to the illegal measures taken by Israel with regard to Jerusalem and the settlements, with a risk of further alterations to the demographic composition of the occupied territory: consequently, the construction of the wall along with measures taken previously severely impeded the exercise by the Palestinian people of its right to self-determination, and was therefore a breach of Israel's obligation to respect that right.⁸¹

13.e. Violations of the rights of women and girls

85. Israel violates the rights of Palestinian women and girls through multiple discriminatory laws, policies, and measures. In addition to extensively documented violent Israeli practices in the OPT that deprive Palestinian women of their right to life, liberty, and security, Israel enforces a complex web of discriminatory laws and rules that have a particularly severe gendered impact.⁸² Examples include movement restrictions, discriminatory residency laws, restrictions on family reunification, home demolitions, arbitrary detention, and targeting of human rights and women's rights defenders.⁸³

86. In 2017, the CEDAW Committee expressed concern that Palestinian women and girls in the OPT “continue to be subjected to excessive use of force and abuse” by Israeli occupation forces and settlers, “including physical, psychological and verbal abuse and sexual harassment and violations of their right to life”, and noted that “[t]he practice of night raids employed by the Israeli security forces disproportionately affects women and girls”.⁸⁴ The Committee demanded that Israel “put an end to all human rights abuses and violations perpetrated against women and girls”, including policies and practices of evictions, punitive home demolitions, restriction on the movement, night raids, and abuses at Israeli check points, which “disproportionately affect women and girls”.⁸⁵ The CEDAW

Committee also expressed concerns with respect to the “increased number of Palestinian women and girls who are subjected to prolonged administrative detention and forcible transfers” from the OPT to detention centers in Israel and about reports of their limited access to justice and health-care services”.⁸⁶ These concerns were raised by CEDAW earlier, in its 2011 review of Israel,⁸⁷ which also deplored Israel’s failure to document, prosecute, and punish attacks on Palestinian women by both State and non-State actors.⁸⁸ In 2022 the UN Human Rights Committee raised further concerns about the intersecting forms of violence that Palestinian women face as a result of Israeli policies in the OPT, noting that “Palestinian women whose residency status depends solely on that of their spouses may be reluctant to report domestic violence or file for divorce”, implicating violation by Israel of Articles 17, 23, 24, and 26 of the ICCPR.⁸⁹

87. In the Gaza Strip, in particular, the severe restrictions on the movement of Palestinian people imposed by Israel, and repeated Israeli military attacks, have had severe cumulative gendered impacts, and exacerbated gender-specific risks and vulnerabilities. One of the exceptions to the closure is a small number of businesspeople who are able to exit Gaza in order to sell goods outside it. Women, however, who are more likely to work in civil society organizations or the public service sector, or manage small businesses, do not meet Israel’s criteria for permits to exit or sell goods. considerable adverse impact on Palestinian women’s ability to organize, engage in collective action, and advocate for their rights and freedoms.⁹⁵ Even prior to this criminalization, the CEDAW Committee had raised concerns in 2017 with respect to Palestinian (and Israeli) women human rights defenders and non-governmental organizations working on gender equality and women’s empowerment being “subjected to severe restrictions on their activities, including through limitations on their financing”.⁹⁶

13.f. Apartheid

89. Israel is in violation of the international law prohibition of apartheid through the creation and perpetuation of discriminatory policies and practices that are systematically applied to the Palestinian people, with the intention of creating a regime of Jewish supremacy over the Palestinian people. This conclusion was affirmed by multiple Palestinian, Israeli and international human rights organizations in reports that have documented, in great detail, Israeli policies and practices that amount to apartheid, including Al-Haq,⁹⁷ Al-Mezan,⁹⁸ B’Tselem,⁹⁹

For example, the CERD, in its 2012 review of Israel, expressed grave concerns at the consequences of policies and practices which amount to de "facto segregation",¹⁰⁵ and called on Israel "to eradicate all forms of segregation between Jewish and non-Jewish communities," and to "to take immediate measures to prohibit and eradicate any such policies or practices which severely and disproportionately affect the Palestinian population in the Occupied Palestinian Territory," finding them to be in violation of article 3 of ICERD.¹⁰⁶ More recently in 2020, the CERD noted with concern the “existence in the OPt of two entirely separate legal systems and sets of institutions for Jewish communities in illegal settlements on the one hand and Palestinian populations living in Palestinian towns and villages on the other hand”.¹⁰⁷ The UN Human Rights Committee also expressed concerns in 2014 that “the Jewish and non-Jewish population are treated differently in several regards”.¹⁰⁸

14. Different forms of illegality

92. The terms "illegal occupation" and "unlawful occupation" are ambiguous, as they can refer to either existential illegality, illegality in conduct, or both. Existential illegality pertains to the occupation's denial of self-determination or its invalid purposes, such as annexation or self-defense. Illegality in conduct refers to specific breaches of international law. It is crucial to address the full legal context when assessing the occupation's legality, ensuring that key features are placed correctly within legal frameworks and recognizing when terms like "legality" or "illegality" are used narrowly.

15. Importance of the correct starting point: everything Israel does in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip lacks a valid international legal basis and is an illegal exercise of authority, not just those things that violate the rules applicable to the conduct of the occupation

15.a. Illegal exercise of authority as a general matter

93. A fundamental consequence of the existential illegality of the occupation is 106 - Ibid., para. 11.

107 - CERD, Concluding Observations on the Combined Seventeenth to Nineteenth Reports of Israel, CERD/C/ISR/CO/27 ,19-17 January 2022, para. 22, <https://www.ohchr.org/en/documents/concluding-observations/cerdcisrco-19-17committee-elimination-racial-discrimination>.

108 - Human Rights Committee, Concluding observations on the fourth periodic report of Israel, CCPR/C/ISR/CO/21 ,4 November 2014, para. 7, <https://www.ohchr.org/en/documents/concluding-observations/ccprcisrco-4concluding-observations-fourth-periodic-report-israel>.

that, necessarily, everything Israel does in Gaza and the West Bank (including East Jerusalem) lacks a valid international legal basis, and is an illegal exercise of authority, not just those things which violate the law regulating the conduct of the occupation. Just as the existence of the conduct-regulatory framework does not provide a basis for Israel to maintain the occupation, so too, if the occupation is maintained by Israel, as it is currently, the fact that the substantive norms of this regulatory framework do then entitle and indeed require Israel to do certain things does not alter the more fundamental position that Israel lacks any legal authority to do anything, and whatever it therefore does is illegal, even if it is compliant with and pursuant to the rules of the conduct-regulatory framework. Thus, the United Nations Human Rights Committee observed in para. 70 of its 2019 General Comment 36 on the right to life in the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (to which Israel is a party) that a State engaging in a use of force that constitutes aggression—i.e., one that is existentially illegal in this way according to the jus ad bellum, as in the present case—violates ipso facto the obligation in the Covenant not to engage in the arbitrary deprivation of life.¹⁰⁹ In other words, in an illegal use of force, every violation of the right to life is, necessarily, ‘arbitrary’ (i.e. lacking in legally valid justification) and therefore illegal as a violation of the Covenant.

15.b. Interplay between ad bellum and in bello legality

94. How can international law simultaneously say that the very existence of the occupation is illegal, and that Israel is required and entitled to do certain things during it? How can, for example, Israel be understood to be entitled to use necessary and proportionate force to promote public order in the West Bank (according to IHL and potentially also IHRL) if its very presence there, including when it comes to public order functions, is an illegal use of force (according to the jus ad bellum)—and in consequence, following the logic of the UN Human Rights Committee, a particular public order action, involving lethal force that is necessary and proportionate, and otherwise also IHL compliant, is illegal in

95. The law operates at two levels: one addressing the use of force and its legality (jus ad bellum), and the other regulating the conduct of force (jus in bello). International Humanitarian Law (IHL) applies equally to states, whether their use of force is lawful or unlawful in jus ad bellum terms, aiming to curb excesses in war. Human rights law also applies extraterritorially, regardless of legality. The goal is to ensure that states act humanely by prohibiting "inhumane" actions, whether their force is justified or not. This dual approach allows for specific rules and enforcement mechanisms to prevent inhumane conduct, universally applied to all belligerents.

96. For Israel, International Humanitarian Law (IHL), including occupation law, provides no legal justification for its actions during the occupation, as its very presence violates fundamental legal principles. Violations of IHL, though significant, do not address the core issue: Israel's occupation is illegal for more fundamental reasons than the specific rules IHL regulates (e.g., military necessity, proportionality). Analyzing incidents solely in terms of IHL compliance distorts the legal picture, suggesting that an IHL-compliant incident is lawful or an IHL-violating incident is only illegal due to the IHL breach. The true illegality lies in the absence of Israel's valid authority to impose restrictions, such as those at checkpoints, in the first place.

15.c. Example: the 2022 killing of Shireen Abu Akleh and the attack on her pallbearers

97. In May 2022, the killing of Palestinian-American journalist Shireen Abu Akleh and the subsequent attack on her pallbearers by Israeli soldiers sparked widespread outrage. Both critics and Israel approached these incidents through the lens of International Humanitarian Law (IHL) and International Human Rights Law (IHRL). The focus was on whether the force used was justified within these legal frameworks: for the killing, the analysis centered on whether journalists could be targeted or if the killing was permissible as collateral damage; for the pallbearer attack, the question was whether there was a legitimate security concern and whether the response was necessary and proportionate. Critics argued that both breaches occurred, while Israel maintained compliance with these laws. This shared focus on IHL and IHRL framed the way the incidents were understood and assessed.

98. Focusing solely on specific incidents, like Shireen Abu Akleh's killing and the violence against her pallbearers, misses the broader context: these acts occurred because Israeli soldiers were present in occupied territories. The occupation itself is a systemic form of oppression and violence, rooted in illegitimate authority. This perspective, grounded in jus ad bellum and the law of self-determination under IHRL, renders the occupation and all actions within it inherently unlawful.

15.d. Different actors and different obligations

99. The legal position may cause confusion, as soldiers typically follow IHL and IHRL standards, but not the full legal framework that ensures lawful conduct. However, international law primarily targets the State of Israel, not individual soldiers, except for certain standards on occupation conduct. Soldiers are trained to follow these standards, with the crime of aggression being the key exception. This crime applies to senior officials who control or direct state actions, as outlined by the Rome Statute for the ICC.¹¹⁰

100. The effect of these differences is to disaggregate the legal framework in a manner that corresponds to the different determinative roles that actors play. Those in a position to determine the continued existence of the occupation, whether in civilian or military positions, are potentially subject to an international criminal sanction—the crime of aggression—for their role in this continued existence. The State of Israel is legally responsible under the jus ad bellum and the law of self-determination. It is the responsibility of Israel's leaders to ensure compliance with these obligations. If they fail, and the occupation persists, both the leaders and the 110 - Rome Statute, Art. 8bis 1.

State are legally responsible for the unlawful presence and authority of soldiers in the West Bank. Individual soldiers, however, are only legally accountable for their compliance with IHL, as dictated by their training and authority limits. Any deprivation of life by these soldiers that does not breach IHL is still an unlawful violation of the right to life under human rights law, with responsibility lying with the State or its leaders, especially in cases of aggression. The State must end the occupation to avoid violations of human rights law, and leaders must direct State policy to prevent the crime of aggression.

16. Israel's violations are 'serious' breaches of peremptory/jus cogens/non-derogable obligations

101. A serious breach of a peremptory norm of international law is defined in Article 41, paragraph 2, of the ARSIWA as being "a gross or systemic failure by the responsible State to fulfil the obligation" concerned.¹¹¹ The commentary notes:

To be considered systematic, a violation must be carried out in an organized and deliberate manner. "Gross" refers to the intensity or effect of the violation, signifying a direct and flagrant assault on protected values. While the terms are not mutually exclusive, serious breaches are often both systematic and gross. Factors establishing the seriousness of a violation include the intent to breach the norm, the scope and number of violations, and the gravity of their impact on victims. Certain peremptory norms, such as prohibitions against aggression and genocide, inherently require large-scale intentional violations.¹¹²

102. Violations of the following peremptory norms are of their nature 'systemic', necessarily involving an intentional violation on a large scale. Their violation by Israel is, thus, by definition 'serious'.

111 - ARSIWA, Art. 2(41). See also ILC jus cogens Draft Conclusions & Commentaries, Conclusion 19, para. 3, and ARSIWA, Part Two, Ch. III, Art. 41 Commentary; ILC jus cogens Draft Conclusions & Commentaries, Conclusion 19 Commentary.

112 - ARSIWA, Part Two, Ch. III, Art. 40 Commentary, para. 8.

- (1) Self-determination.¹¹³
- (2) Aggression.¹¹⁴
- (3) Apartheid.

103. Violations of the following peremptory norms are of their nature ‘gross’, necessarily being of a flagrant nature, amounting to a direct and outright assault on the values protected by the rule. Their violation by Israel is, thus, by definition ‘serious’.

(1) The ‘core/basic’ protective rules of IHL, which are classified as ‘serious violations’ (and in consequence states bear special obligations to suppress them through individual criminal responsibility, and international criminal jurisdiction for them is provided by the ICC—the concept of ‘war crimes’). As indicated above, the prohibition of implanting settlements in occupied territory is one such rule.

104. Israel’s violations of the following two peremptory norms have been both gross and systematic, as has been widely documented, including by various United Nations bodies, the evidence of which having been submitted to the Court by the United Nations in the present proceedings.¹¹⁵ These violations are, therefore, ‘serious.’

(1) The prohibition of racial discrimination generally (beyond what is covered by apartheid).

113 - The commentary to article 41 of the ARSIWA, regarding the consequences for serious breaches, notes that there is an obligation of “collective non-recognition by the international community as a whole of the legality of situations resulting directly from serious breaches”. As a direct example, it provides “[t]he obligation applies to “situations” created by these breaches, such as, for example, attempted acquisition of sovereignty over territory through the denial of the right of self-determination of peoples”. In this example, then, a denial of the right of self-determination is being posited as a ‘serious breach’ (ARSIWA, Part Two, Ch. III, Art. 41 Commentary, para. 5).

114 - On the particular breach here involved in Israel’s use of force for annexation purposes, it is notable that the UN Human Rights Council referred to the “serious breaches of peremptory norms of international law by Israel...the prohibition of the acquisition of territory by force” (Human Rights Council Res. 11 ,28/49 April 2022, preamble, para. 7).

(2) The prohibition of torture and cruel, inhuman and degrading treatment and punishment.

PART 4: CONSEQUENCES

17. Invalidity, and implications for individual rights

17.a. Invalidity generally

17.a.i. All unlawful acts are invalid

105. A basic postulate of law is that actions which are unlawful or which are not pursuant to a valid legal entitlement are invalid—without legal effect. This is linked to the general legal principle of ex injuria jus non oritur—legal rights cannot arise out of an illegal act.

17.a.ii. Everything Israel does in the OPT is invalid because the occupation is existentially illegal

106. The illegal nature of Israel's presence and exercise of authority in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, and Gaza, necessarily means that, a general matter, everything that Israel has done and is doing there—including, in the case of certain parts of the West Bank, decisions involving the full-spectrum of territorial administration matters, from the question of land ownership to issues of cultural heritage—on whatever basis (including, potentially, an ostensibly purportedly sovereign basis when it comes to East Jerusalem) is legally invalid.

107. The relationship between the existential illegality of the occupation (not merely the illegality of Israel's exercise of sovereignty in East Jerusalem, but its broader authority over Palestinian territories) and the regulatory framework of occupation law must be carefully examined. It is essential to prioritize the more fundamental issue—whether Israel should be engaged in the occupation at all—before addressing what occupation law permits and requires. Furthermore, when considering occupation law, it must be interpreted in the context of the overarching legal position. For instance, occupation law's requirement for an occupier to maintain the status quo in occupied territories must be understood in light of the potential stakes involved, particularly the Palestinian people's right to self-determination, a jus cogens right in international law.

108. On the specific issue of freedom of movement within, and freedom of entry and exit to and from, the West Bank (including East Jerusalem) and Gaza, of people and goods (including aid), it is important to note the following.

(1) Israel's decisions and practices regarding movement, entry, and exit of people and goods in the occupied territories violate not only the conduct-regulatory laws (such as occupation law) but also international law as a whole. These actions are inherently illegal because Israel has no legal entitlement to exercise authority over these territories. Therefore, beyond the breaches of specific conduct-regulatory law, Israel's authority over these areas is a direct violation of the law on the use of force and the law of self-determination. This illegality stems from the mere exercise of authority, not just from any invalid attempt to assert sovereignty. In essence, Israel's imposition of movement restrictions in the West Bank and Gaza is illegal not only because it is not the territorial sovereign but because it has no legal right to exert non-sovereign authority over these areas.

(2) As a result, any actions Israel takes to regulate or restrict the movement of people, goods, or aid within or between the West Bank (including East Jerusalem) and Gaza are legally invalid. Israel has no international legal entitlement to impose such restrictions. This situation differs significantly from a State exercising authority over its own territory or over non-sovereign territory where it has a lawful international basis to do so. In this case, Israel lacks the international legal capacity to prevent the entry, exit, or movement of individuals or goods in these areas for any reason.

17.a.iii. Affirmations of invalidity by the UN General Assembly and Security Council

109. The invalidity of that which Israel has done which is illegal has been confirmed as such by the General Assembly and the Security Council. On settlements, for example, the General Assembly deemed Israel's establishment of settlements in the OPT to have "no legal validity".¹¹⁶ The Security Council "determined that the policies and practices of Israel in establishing settlements in the Palestinian and Arab territories occupied since 1967 have no legal validity".¹¹⁷ On the broader annexationist, settler-colonial enterprise, the Security Council found that measures taken by Israel to "change the physical character, demographic composition, institutional structure or status of the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, have no legal validity".¹¹⁸

17.b. Individual rights

17.b.i. The 'Namibia exception'

110. Whereas everything done by Israel under the occupation has been and is invalid as a general matter, human rights law requires that certain consequences of this be treated as legally valid for individuals, if to do otherwise would violate their rights in human rights law. This approach was adopted by the present Court in the Namibia Advisory Opinion, in the context of one of the key consequences of validity and invalidity—the position that should be taken by third States in terms of recognition. The Court observed that:

...the non-recognition of South Africa's administration of the Territory should not result in depriving the people of Namibia of any advantages derived from international co-operation. In particular, while official acts performed by the Government of South Africa on behalf of or concerning Namibia after the termination of the Mandate are illegal and invalid, this invalidity cannot be extended to those acts, such as, for instance, the registration of births, deaths and marriages, the effects of which can be ignored only to the detriment of the inhabitants of the Territory. ¹¹⁹

17.b.ii. Settlers

111. The issue is complicated by the presence of Israeli settlers in the OPT, whose rights under human rights law need careful assessment. A common but incorrect view is that the application of human rights law to Israel in the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, allows settlers to claim rights—such as land and property—that they would not otherwise have. These claims are often based on administrative and judicial decisions made by Israel, which may be discriminatory and rely on illegal authority. This misconception suggests that human rights law supports settler colonialism and weakens the effectiveness of international law in condemning it.

112. This view is incorrect for several reasons. The legal regime governing the occupation combines human rights law with international humanitarian law (IHL), including occupation law, which distinguishes between the Palestinian population and Israeli settlers. Additionally, individuals do not have the human right to benefit from unlawful discrimination. On the contrary, such discrimination necessitates the removal of benefits gained through it. A core legal principle also dictates that if something is unlawfully taken from its rightful owner, valid title cannot be transferred to a third party. Moreover, human rights law, particularly regarding land and property, freedom of movement, and residence, requires a context-specific balancing of conflicting rights and permissible restrictions. This contextual approach leads to different legal outcomes in similar situations, depending on the group involved and how the context applies to them.

113. Context here includes not only IHL and occupation law but also the prohibition on racial discrimination and apartheid, alongside the right of self-determination—rights with non-derogable status. In the West Bank, the right of self-determination belongs to the Palestinian people, who live on land that constitutes the basis of this right. Conversely, Israeli settlers' presence in the West Bank is illegal under international law. Treating the human rights of both groups as identical overlooks this distinction. While Israeli settlers retain human rights in the West Bank as individuals, the legal context of their status as settlers affects the substantive meaning of certain rights.

18. Consequences for the Palestinian people: the right to resist

114. One of the main legal consequences for the Palestinian people of Israel's violation of their right to self-determination through the occupation is that they have a legal right, as a matter of customary international law, arising out of their right to self-determination, to resist the occupation.

115. The fact that this right exists for a people in such a situation was assumed when the General Assembly stated, in the Friendly Relations and Co-operation Declaration, that

In their actions against, and resistance to, such forcible action in pursuit of the exercise of their right to self-determination, such peoples are entitled to seek and to receive support in accordance with the purposes and principles of the Charter.¹²⁰

In its earlier General Assembly in Resolution 2105 (XX), dated 20 December 1965, the General Assembly recognized

...the legitimacy of the struggle of peoples under colonial rule to exercise their right of self-determination, and invites all states to provide material and moral assistance to the national liberation movements in colonial territories.¹²¹

In Resolution 2649 (XXV), 30 November 1970, the General Assembly

Affirms the legitimacy of the struggle of peoples under colonial and foreign domination recognized as being entitled to the right of self-determination to restore to themselves that right by any means at their disposal ... [and] Recognizes the right of peoples under colonial and alien domination in the legitimate exercise of their right to self-determination to seek and receive all kinds of moral and material assistance, in accordance with the resolutions of the United Nations and the spirit of the Charter of the United Nations. ¹²²

In Resolution 3070 (XXVIII) of 30 November 1973, the General Assembly

...reaffirms the legitimacy of the struggle of peoples for independence, territorial integrity, national unity and liberation from colonial and foreign domination and foreign occupation by all available means, including armed struggle ... [and] calls upon all States, in conformity with the Charter of the United Nations and with relevant resolutions of the United Nations, to recognize the right of all peoples to self-determination and independence and to offer moral, material and any other assistance to all peoples struggling for the full exercise of their inalienable right to self-determination and independence. ¹²³

In Resolution 35/35A, dated 14 November 1980, the General Assembly

Reaffirms the legitimacy of the struggle of peoples for independence, territorial integrity, national unity and liberation from colonial and foreign domination and foreign occupation by all available means, including armed struggle. ¹²⁴

116. The Assembly has invoked the right in the particular context of the Palestinian struggle. In Resolution 2787 (XXVI), dated 6 December 1971, it Confirms the legality of the people's struggle for self-determination and liberation from colonial and foreign domination and foreign subjugation ... in particular that of ... the Palestinian people by all available means consistent with the Charter of the United Nations. ¹²⁵

117. In his separate opinion in the Namibia case before the present Court, Judge Ammoun wrote that it is "beyond dispute" that "the conscious action of

19. Consequences for Israel

19.a. Introduction

118. As the present Court explained in the 1971 Namibia Advisory Opinion, “the qualification of a situation as illegal does not by itself put an end to it”.¹²⁷ Rather, it is a “first, necessary step in an endeavour to bring the illegal situation to an end”.¹²⁸ A determination of illegality cannot remain without consequences, and thus when a State violates its international obligations, as the present Court indicated in the Wall Advisory Opinion: “it follows that the responsibility of that State is engaged under international law”.¹²⁹

119. This section addresses the three obligations Israel must fulfil as the State responsible for the internationally wrongful acts set out in the previous Part. These obligations are:

- (1) Cessation;¹³⁰
- (2) making guarantees of non-repetition;¹³¹

129 - Wall Advisory Opinion (2004), p. 197, para.147. This is reflected in Article 1 of the ARSIWA: “Every internationally wrongful act of a State entails the international responsibility of that State” (ARSIWA, Art. 1).

131 - See ARSIWA, Art. 30(b).

(3) reparation,¹³² which can come in the form of restitution,¹³³ compensation,¹³⁴ and/or satisfaction.¹³⁵

19.b. Cessation: Israel must put an end to the unlawful situation immediately

19.b.i. General duty

120. Israel as the State responsible for the internationally wrongful acts set out in the previous Part must cease these acts and end the violations.¹³⁶ This duty is vital. Not only is it a necessary step on the path to eliminating the consequences of Israel's wrongful conduct. Also, it safeguards the continuing validity and effectiveness of the rules that have been violated. In this way, in the words of the ILC ARSIWA Commentary, it "protects both the interests of the injured State or States and the international community as a whole in the preservation of, and reliance on, the rule of law".¹³⁷

121. As the present Court indicated in the Wall Advisory Opinion, the duty of cessation "is well established in general international law, and the Court has on a number of occasions confirmed the existence of that obligation".¹³⁸

France), Arbitration Award, 30 April 1990, para. 114; Libyan Arab Foreign Investment Company (LAFICO) and the Republic of Burundi, Arbitration Award, 4 March 1991, para. 61 (noting that the obligation to put to an end a wrongful act that constitutes a violation of customary international law is "not in doubt").

122. The present Court has repeatedly affirmed that the duty of cessation constitutes an obligation to take immediate steps to put an end to the continuing wrongful act. In the 1980 United States Diplomatic and Consular Staff in Tehran case, the present Court held that Iran had violated, and was continuing to violate, several obligations owed to the USA under international law,¹³⁹ and ordered Iran to “immediately terminate the unlawful detention of the United States Chargé d’affaires and other diplomatic and consular staff and other United States nationals now held hostage in Iran” (emphasis added).¹⁴⁰ In the 2009 Navigational and Related Rights case, the present Court explained:

[I]t should be recalled that when the Court has found that the conduct of a State is of a wrongful nature, and in the event that this conduct persists on the date of the judgment, the State concerned is obliged to cease it immediately [emphasis added].¹⁴¹

123. The immediate nature of the cessation requirement is further illustrated when the requirement has been affirmed in the context of the following situations: first, illegality as a matter of the use of force and, second, illegality as a matter of self-determination.

19.b.iii. Immediacy in ending violations of the use of force including when this involves an occupation

124. In the Military and Paramilitary Activities in and against Nicaragua case, in the context of a finding that the USA violated international law through its use of force and military and paramilitary activities within Nicaragua, the present Court held that the USA is “under a duty immediately to cease and to refrain from all such acts as may constitute breaches” of its legal obligations (emphasis added).

19.b.iv. Immediacy in ending violations of self-determination through unlawful territorial control

125. In the 1971 Namibia Advisory Opinion concerning South Africa's unlawful control over the territory and people of Namibia, the present Court held that "South Africa, being responsible for having created and maintained a situation which the Court has found to have been validly declared illegal, has the obligation to put an end to it" and "the continued presence of South Africa in Namibia being illegal, South Africa is under obligation to withdraw its administration from Namibia immediately and thus put an end to its occupation of the Territory" (emphasis added).¹⁴³

126. In the 2019 Chagos Advisory Opinion, the present Court, having determined that the UK's exercise of control over the Chagos Archipelago was a violation of the law of self-determination, held that "the United Kingdom is under an obligation to bring an end to its administration of the Chagos Archipelago as rapidly as possible..." (emphasis added).¹⁴⁴ Following the Court's decision, the General Assembly adopted Resolution 73/295, demanding that, in accordance with the Court's Advisory Opinion, the United Kingdom "withdraw its colonial administration from the Chagos Archipelago unconditionally within a period of no more than six months from the adoption of the present resolution, thereby enabling Mauritius to complete the decolonization of its territory as rapidly as possible".¹⁴⁵

19.b.v. Israel's position

19.b.v.a. General requirement

142 - Military and Paramilitary Activities in and against Nicaragua Merits Judgment (1986), p. 149, para. 292, sub-para. 12.

144 - Chagos Advisory Opinion (2019), p. 139, para. 178.

145 - GA Res. 24 ,295/73 May 2019, para. 3.

127. Based on the foregoing general principles of State responsibility, Israel must immediately end all the violations of international law outlined in the previous Part.

19.b.v.β. Ending the occupation immediately

128. Fundamentally, this means Israel is under obligation to withdraw its presence and administration entirely from the occupied Palestinian territory immediately. As indicated above, the right of self-determination being violated by the existence of the occupation is to be realized immediately. This realization cannot therefore be made subject to any qualifications, in terms of its temporal character, on any basis. There is, then, no back-door legal basis on which Israel can avoid a requirement to terminate the occupation immediately.

129. This is a material, physical and kinetic requirement of a complete and total end to the Israeli presence and exercise of control and authority in and over the OPT. It includes personnel, notably the armed forces, and also the infrastructure and technology of the occupation, notably checkpoints and surveillance.

130. It is also a requirement applicable to Israeli law and policy: the State should immediately terminate all its political, administrative and legal arrangements that purport to apply in and exercise authority over the OPT. This includes immediately ceasing to apply laws, jurisdiction, and administration—including military and court orders—within the OPT.

131. Within the foregoing is an obligation to cease any activity concerned with altering the legal status of any part of the OPT, including East Jerusalem. Thus, the General Assembly called upon Israel to “rescind all measures already taken and to desist forthwith from taking action which would alter the status of Jerusalem”.¹⁴⁶

132. The legal requirement to immediately terminate the occupation is reflected in and reinforced by determinations by the United Nations General Assembly and 146 - GA Res. 4 ,2253 July 1967, para. 2.

Security Council.

133. The General Assembly has on numerous occasions called for the end of the occupation. In Resolution 2628 of 4 November 1970, for instance, it stated that it:

1. Reaffirms that the acquisition of territories by force is inadmissible and that, consequently, territories thus occupied must be restored;

2. Reaffirms that the establishment of a just and lasting peace in the Middle East should include the application of both the following principles:

(a) Withdrawal of Israeli armed forces from territories occupied in the recent conflict;

(b) Termination of all claims or states of belligerency and respect for and acknowledgement of the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of every State in the area and its right to live in peace within secure and recognized boundaries free from threats or acts of force.¹⁴⁷

In Resolution 3414, the Assembly likewise stated that it:

1. Reaffirms that the acquisition of territory by force is inadmissible and therefore all territories thus occupied must be returned;

2. Condemns Israel's continued occupation of Arab territories in violation of the Charter of the United Nations, the principles of international law and repeated United Nations resolutions.¹⁴⁸

The call for Israel to withdraw from the OPT has been reiterated in numerous other General Assembly resolutions, including Resolutions 32/20 (1977), 33/29 (1978), 34/70 (1979), 35/207 (1980), 36/226A (1981), 38/180A (1983), 45/83A

(1990), ES-10/18 (2009), and 77/247 (2022).¹⁴⁹

134. The Security Council has, on several occasions, called for the withdrawal of Israeli forces from the OPT.¹⁵⁰ As indicated earlier, in Resolution 242 of 22 November 1967, the Council stated that it:

1. Affirms that the fulfilment of Charter principles requires the establishment of a just and lasting peace in the Middle East which should include the application of both the following principles:

(i) Withdrawal of Israel armed forces from territories occupied in the recent conflict;

(ii) Termination of all claims or states of belligerency and respect for and acknowledgement of the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of every State in the area and their right to live in peace within secure and recognized boundaries free from threats or acts of force.¹⁵¹

19.b.v.γ. Return and freedom of movement

135. Israel must immediately cease preventing Palestinian refugees from exercising their right to return to their homes, land, and towns. It must also stop obstructing their movement between Gaza and the West Bank by ensuring automatic, safe, and free passage through Israeli territory. This is essential to remedy the violations of the rights to self-determination, freedom of movement, freedom of religion, and return, which are caused by the ongoing separation of Gaza and the West Bank through Israeli territorial control.

136. The Security Council has demanded, in Resolution 799 of 18 December 1992, that Israel “ensure the safe and immediate return to the occupied territories of all those deported”.¹⁵²

19.b.v.δ. Settlements

137. All settlement activity should cease. The Security Council, having referenced the legal invalidity of Israel establishing the settlements, called upon “Israel, as the occupying Power, to abide scrupulously by the Fourth Geneva Convention...” and to “rescind its previous measures” [i.e., establishing the settlements].¹⁵³ It further called upon Israel “to cease, on an urgent basis, the establishment, construction and planning of settlements”.¹⁵⁴ It later demanded “that Israel immediately and completely cease all settlement activities in the occupied Palestinian territory, including East Jerusalem, and that it fully respect all of its legal obligations in this regard”.¹⁵⁵

138. The General Assembly has repeatedly “Reiterate[d] its demand that Israel immediately and completely cease all settlement activities in the occupied Palestinian territory, including East Jerusalem”.¹⁵⁶

139. The Security Council and the General Assembly have called on Israel to reverse these policies which requires the dismantlement of the settlements and the withdrawal of Israeli settlers from the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem.

19.b.v.ε. Apartheid and racial discrimination generally

140. Israel is required to immediately cease all discriminatory policies and practices that amount to a violation of the prohibition of apartheid as outlined above. More broadly, Israel is required to immediately put an end of all discriminatory practices that privilege Jewish Israelis over the Palestinian people, on both sides of the Green Line and as regards Palestine refugees.¹⁵⁷

19.b.v.στ. The wall

141. As for the wall, Israel is required to fulfil the present Court’s own finding that Israel “has the obligation to cease forthwith the works of construction of the wall being built by it in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including in an around East Jerusalem”.¹⁵⁸ Moreover, the Court held that Israel must dismantle “those parts of the structure situated within the Occupied Palestinian Territory, in and around East Jerusalem”.¹⁵⁹

19.c. Circumstances require that Israel must offer appropriate assurances and guarantees of non-repetition

142. The circumstances of Israel's breaches of international law are such as to require that Israel is obliged to offer assurances and guarantees of non-repetition.

¹⁶⁰ These circumstances are:

(1) The nature of the obligations breached: rules of international law of a fundamental character—peremptory norms, as outlined above. ¹⁶¹

(2) The nature of the breaches, ¹⁶² which can be divided into six factors:

- The duration of the breaches that spans over 75 years, through the policies and practices of all governments of Israel during that period.
- The widespread, systematic and structural nature of the breaches.
- The consistently repeated nature of the breaches, and repeated refusal to heed the calls to end them made by the Palestinian people generally and the Palestinian leadership and the State of Palestine in particular, the General Assembly, the Security Council, the Human Rights Council, the Economic and Social Council, the present Court, other UN bodies and office-holders including multiple Secretaries-General, other international organizations, and many States from all regions in the world, over a more than a half-century period covering, for the United Nations, almost two thirds of the time the organization has been in existence.
- The link between the breaches and unlawful claims that underlie and explain 160 - On this obligation, see ARSIWA, Art. 30(b), and ARSIWA, Part Two, Ch. I, Art. 30 Commentary.

161 - Cf. ARSIWA, Part Two, Ch. I, Art. 30 Commentary, para. 13, the “nature of the obligation” is relevant to whether guarantees are appropriate.

their commission including: that Israel is entitled to the entire land between the Jordan river and the Mediterranean sea and that the Palestinian people do not have the right of self-determination.

- The way the breaches have worsened over decades, including in the course of the occupation, for example the quantum of settlements; the introduction of the Wall and the apartheid road system; the pillage of natural resources.
- The seriousness of the breaches as indicated above.

(3) The foregoing nature of the breaches suggest a real risk of future repetition even if they are initially brought to an end.

143. Bearing in mind what has been reviewed above, the situation is manifestly one where the injured party—the State of Palestine and the Palestinian people as a self-determination unit— and the international community have “reason to believe that the mere restoration of the pre-existing situation does not protect it satisfactorily”.¹⁶³ Israel must, therefore, in addition to implementing the above obligations concerning cessation, give guarantees to the Palestinian people and the State of Palestine concerning non-repetition.

144. The present Court has taken seriously the need for injured States to be given guarantees of non-repetition. In the Armed Activities on the Territory of the Congo case, the Court held that it

...considers that, if a State assumes an obligation in an international agreement to respect the sovereignty and territorial integrity of the other States parties to that agreement (an obligation which exists also under general international law) and a commitment to cooperate with them in order to fulfil such obligation, this expresses a clear legally binding undertaking that it will not repeat any wrongful acts. In the Court’s view, the commitments assumed by Uganda under the Tripartite Agreement must be regarded as meeting the DRC’s request for specific guarantees and assurances of non-repetition. The Court expects and demands that the Parties will respect and adhere to their obligations under that Agreement and under general international law...¹⁶⁴

In the Application of the Genocide Convention (Bosnia and Herzegovina v. Serbia and Montenegro) case, the Court assumed that there was a potentially valid general legal basis for requiring guarantees of non-repetition, holding that there were not sufficient grounds for this requirement to be triggered in the circumstances of the case:

In its final submissions, the Applicant requests that the Court direct Serbia and Montenegro to provide specific guarantees and assurances that it will not repeat the wrongful acts complained of, with the form of such guarantees to be determined by the Court. This submission pertains to all the wrongful acts, including breaches of the Genocide Convention, such as the Respondent's alleged failure to prevent genocide, and its involvement in complicity, conspiracy, and incitement. Since the Court has not upheld these claims, the submission is dismissed.

However, the Court considers whether it is appropriate to request guarantees and assurances of non-repetition in relation to the established breaches of the obligations to prevent and punish genocide. The Applicant's counsel presented concerns over "recent events," particularly movements in Serbia and Montenegro calling for genocide, as grounds for this request. The Court, however, finds that these concerns do not provide sufficient grounds for requiring guarantees of non-repetition. Therefore, the Court concludes that the declaration mentioned in paragraph 465 of the ruling is adequate regarding the Respondent's continuing duty to punish genocide, and it does not deem it necessary to direct guarantees of non-repetition.¹⁶⁵

There would have been no need to consider whether “grounds” for guarantees were “sufficient” if there was no legal requirement to give such guarantees in the first place. Thus the Court clearly assumed the existence of such a requirement. For the foregoing reasons, and to borrow the words of the Court, the present case is one in which a direction for guarantees of non-repetition would be appropriate.

19.d. Reparation

19.d.i. General obligation

145. Israel is obliged to make adequate reparation for its breaches of international law. In the words of the Permanent Court,

[t]he essential principle contained in the actual notion of an illegal act . . . is that reparation must, as far as possible, wipe out all the consequences of the illegal act and reestablish the situation which would, in all probability, have existed if that act had not been committed. ¹⁶⁶

146. This obligation has been applied by the present Court in varying contexts, including the current one. ¹⁶⁷ In the Wall Advisory Opinion, the Court held:

[G]iven that the construction of the wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory has, inter alia, entailed the requisition and destruction of homes, businesses and agricultural holdings, the Court finds further that Israel has the obligation to make reparation for the damage caused to all the natural or legal persons concerned. ¹⁶⁸

166 - See Factory at Chorzów (Claim for Indemnity) (Merits), Judgment of 13 September 1928, P.C.I.J., Series A, No. 1928 ,17, p. 47.

167 - See, e.g., Application of Genocide Convention (Bosnia and Herzegovina v. Serbia and Montenegro) Judgment (2007), p. 232, para. 63-460; Jurisdictional Immunities of the State Judgment (2012), p. 153, para. 136 (“There is no doubt that the violation by Italy of certain of its international legal obligations entails its international responsibility and places upon it, by virtue of general international law, an obligation to make full reparation for the injury caused by the wrongful acts committed”). ARSIWA, Art. 31 (“The responsible State is under an obligation to make full reparation for the injury caused by the internationally wrongful act”).

168 - Wall Advisory Opinion (2004), p. 198, para. 152.

147. The obligation has been applied in circumstances in which the act is unlawful in terms of the international law on the use of force—one of the headings of Israel’s illegality. In the Military and Paramilitary Activities in and against Nicaragua case, the present Court held that the unlawful use of force attracted reparation “for all injury caused” to Nicaragua by the USA.¹⁶⁹ Reparation for injuries caused by the wrongful act can take a variety of forms, including restitution, compensation, and/or satisfaction. As the Commentary to the ILC ARSIWA indicates:

[F]ull reparation may only be achieved in particular cases by the combination of different forms of reparation. For example, re-establishment of the situation which existed before the breach may not be sufficient for full reparation because the wrongful act has caused additional material damage (e.g. injury flowing from the loss of the use of property wrongfully seized). Wiping out all the consequences of the wrongful act may thus require some or all forms of reparation to be provided, depending on the type and extent of the injury that has been caused.¹⁷⁰

19.d.ii. Restitution

148. Restitution is the prime means of reparation.¹⁷¹ It is related to but distinct from cessation in that it is aimed at the re-establishment of the situation that existed before the breach— reverting to the status quo ante. In the Chorzów Factory case, the Permanent Court underscored the primacy of restitution over other forms of reparation.¹⁷² According to Article 35 of the ILC ARSIWA:

A State responsible for an internationally wrongful act is under an obligation to make restitution, that is, to re-establish the situation which existed before the wrongful act was committed, provided and to the extent that restitution:

- (a) is not materially impossible;
- (b) does not involve a burden out of all proportion to the benefit deriving from restitution instead of compensation.¹⁷³

149. Examples of restitutionary acts would be:

(1) Restoring full control over the occupied territory to the sovereign—the State of Palestine and the Palestinian people. In the words of the General Assembly in the context of the OPT, “the acquisition of territories by force is inadmissible and that, consequently, territories thus occupied must be restored”.¹⁷⁴

(2) The annulment or rescission of legislative acts, decrees, or administrative acts or orders in connection with the occupation, subject to the application of a human rights-based consideration akin to the ‘Namibia exception’ concerning invalidity and non-recognition. In the Wall Advisory Opinion, the present Court specified that

[a]ll legislative and regulatory acts adopted with a view to [the] construction [of the wall], and to the establishment of its associated regime, must forthwith be repealed or rendered ineffective, except in so far as such acts, by providing for compensation or other forms of reparation for the Palestinian population, may continue to be relevant for compliance by Israel with [its] obligations.¹⁷⁵

Condemns Israel’s aggression and practices against the Palestinian people in the occupied Palestinian territories and outside these territories, particularly ... the establishment of settlements”); SC Res. 23 ,2334 December 2016, para. 2 (“The Security Council ... Reiterates its demand that Israel immediately and completely cease all settlement activities in the occupied Palestinian territory, including East Jerusalem...”), para. 4 (“Stresses that the cessation of all Israeli settlement activities is essential for salvaging the two-State solution, and calls for affirmative steps to be taken immediately to reverse the negative trends on the ground that are imperilling the two-State solution”); SC Res. 30 ,476 June 1980, para. 5 (The Security Council ... Urgently calls on Israel, the occupying Power, to abide by the present and previous Security Council resolutions and to desist forthwith from persisting in the policy and measures affecting the character and status of the Holy City of Jerusalem”); SC Res. 1 ,465 March 1980, para. 6 (“The Security Council ... calls upon the Government and people of Israel to ... dismantle the existing settlements and in particular to cease, on an urgent basis, the establishment, construction and planning of settlements in the Arab territories occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem); SC Res. 22 ,446 March 1979, para. 4 (“The Security Council ... Calls once more upon Israel to ... desist from taking any action which would result in changing the legal status and geographical nature and materially affecting the demographic composition of the Arab territories occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, and, in particular, not to transfer parts of its own civilian population into the occupied Arab territories”).

from a peremptory norm of general international law. In the case of unlawful annexation of a State, for example, while the withdrawal of occupying forces and the annulment of annexation decrees may be classified as cessation rather than restitution, ancillary measures, such as the return of individuals or property seized during the invasion, are necessary. These measures are essential as part of either the cessation or restitution process.¹⁷⁹

This logic would apply equally to an existentially unlawful occupation generically, including where this illegality is in part, as here, due to purported annexation, and would therefore apply to the entirety of the OPT, and to matters arising out of the entire course of the occupation, not just, as in the example, in the initial phase (if this is what the word ‘invasion’ is referring to).

19.d.iii. Compensation

151. As the present Court affirmed in the Gabčíkovo-Nagymaros case, “[i]t is a well-established rule of international law that an injured State is entitled to obtain compensation from the State which has committed an internationally wrongful act for the damage caused by it”.¹⁸⁰ This entitlement applies equally to the Palestinian people, both individually and collectively, and in the form of the State of Palestine, for the damage caused to them by Israel’s violations of their rights. The relationship between the compensation and restitution requirements is indicated in ILC ARSIWA Article 36: “[t]he State responsible for an internationally wrongful act is under an obligation to compensate for the damage caused thereby, insofar as such damage is not made good by restitution”.¹⁸¹

152. The injury which reparation is due “includes any damage, whether material or moral, caused by the internationally wrongful act”.¹⁸² As the ILC explained: Material damage here refers to damage to property or other interests of the State

179 - ARSIWA, Part Two, Ch. II, Art. 35 Commentary, para. 6.

180 - See Gabčíkovo-Nagymaros Project (Hungary/Slovakia), Judgment, I.C.J. Reports 1997, p. 7 at p. 81, para. 152.

182 ARSIWA, Article 2)31).

and its nationals which is assessable in financial terms. ‘Moral’ damage includes such things as individual pain and suffering, loss of loved ones or personal affront associated with an intrusion on one’s home or private life.¹⁸³

This can thus capture compensation for the following (a non-exhaustive list) caused by the existence and conduct of the occupation throughout the entire period of its existence: death, personal injury, mental pain and anguish; the taking of movable or immovable property (including the deprivation of the effective use, control and benefits of property); the loss or injury to intangible property, loss of business profits, and loss or damage to livelihoods.

153. Compensation means, in the words of the Permanent Court in the Chorzów Factory case, the “payment of a sum corresponding to the value which a restitution in kind would bear”¹⁸⁴ and, according to ILC ARSIWA Article 36, “shall cover any financially assessable damage including loss of profits insofar as it is established”.

154. In the 2004 Wall Advisory Opinion, the present Court outlined Israel’s obligations in relation to that particular context in the following terms:

[Israel must] return the land, orchards, olive groves and other immovable property seized from any natural or legal person for purposes of construction of the wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory. In the event that such restitution should prove to be materially impossible, Israel has an obligation to compensate the persons in question for the damage suffered. The Court considers that Israel also has an obligation to compensate, in accordance with the applicable rules of international law, all natural or legal persons having suffered any form of material damage as a result of the wall’s construction.¹⁸⁶

183 - ARSIWA, Part Two, Ch. II, Art. 2)31) Commentary, para. 5.

185 - ARSIWA, Art. 2)36).

186 - Wall Advisory Opinion (2004), p. 198, para. 153.

19.d.iv. Satisfaction

155. As indicated in ILC ARSIWA Article. 37, “[t]he State responsible for an internationally wrongful act is under an obligation to give satisfaction for the injury caused by that act insofar as it cannot be made good by restitution or compensation”.¹⁸⁷ The Article goes on to indicate that satisfaction may “consist in an acknowledgement of the breach, an expression of regret, a formal apology or another appropriate modality”.¹⁸⁸

20. Consequences for third States

20.a. Non-recognition

20.a.i. Illegality—invalidity—non-recognition

156. Earlier it was indicated that the general consequence of the existence and conduct of the occupation being illegal is that everything done by Israel in relation to this activity is legally invalid. The chief significance of this for third States is that they should not recognize as valid that which is legally invalid. To do otherwise would be to implicitly endorse illegality or to mistakenly treat as lawful something which is illegal. This would run contrary to the legal maxim that is, as indicated above, the basis for the invalidity itself—ex injuria jus non oritur—legal rights cannot arise out of an illegal act. As Judge Higgins indicated in her Separate Opinion to the present Court’s Wall Advisory Opinion, the proposition “[t]hat an illegal situation is not to be recognized...by third parties is self-evident”.¹⁸⁹ This is, then, a general principle of law in the sense that it is inherent in the concept of law and the rule of law itself.¹⁹⁰

187 - ARSIWA, Art. 37.

188 - Ibid.

189 - Wall Advisory Opinion (2004), Separate Opinion of Judge Higgins, p. 216, para. 38.

190 - Cf. Statute of the International Court of Justice, 24 October 33 ,1945 U.N.T.S. (“I.C.J. Statute”), Art. 38.1.c.

157. An obligation of non-recognition also exists in international law in relation to breaches of particular fundamental rules. This has the effect of reinforcing, and concretizing as a specific obligation, the operation of this more general principle in the particular context of the breaches covered. It is addressed separately below.

20.a.ii. The ‘Namibia exception’ revisited

158. To repeat what was said earlier in the context of the invalidity that is the basis for non-recognition: human rights law requires that certain acts should be recognized if this is necessary to secure the rights of individuals in human rights law. To repeat from above the extract from the Namibia case of the present Court:

... The non-recognition of South Africa's administration of the Territory should not lead to depriving the people of Namibia of any benefits resulting from international cooperation. While official acts performed by the South African Government on behalf of or concerning Namibia after the termination of the Mandate are illegal and invalid, this invalidity cannot be applied to acts such as the registration of births, deaths, and marriages, as disregarding these acts would only harm the inhabitants of the Territory.¹⁹¹

159. To reiterate what was also said earlier in the context of invalidity: this rights-based exception to recognition does not somehow require Israeli settlers to be recognized as validly present in and owners of land and property in the oPt, since this presence, and ‘ownership’, is legally invalid, including, as indicated above, as a matter of human rights law.

20.a.iii. Aspects of the obligation

20.a.iii.α. Obligation not to recognize the validity of Israel’s presence in the OPT in and of itself

191 - Namibia Advisory Opinion, p. 56, para. 125.

160. States must not recognize the validity of Israel’s presence in or control over the OPT, nor its claims to sovereignty. This includes rejecting any justification Israel offers for its presence or control. Specifically, acknowledging Israel’s claim to maintain the occupation for security purposes would imply recognition of its actions under international law on the use of force, which is incorrect, as Israel’s actions do not meet legal criteria. Such recognition would equate to endorsing aggression and a violation of self-determination, thereby undermining core principles of international law in this context.

161. The general obligation not to recognize the validity of Israel’s presence in the OPT is reflected in the present Court’s holding, in the Namibia Advisory Opinion, that there was an obligation on the part of all States “to recognize the illegality and invalidity of South Africa’s continued presence” in Namibia.¹⁹² The Security Council stated that

States Members of the United Nations are under obligation to recognize the illegality of South Africa's presence in Namibia and the invalidity of its acts on behalf of or concerning Namibia.¹⁹³

In paragraphs 2 and 5 of Resolution 276, 1970 the Security Council called upon all States

[p]articularly those which have economic and other interests in Namibia to refrain from any dealings with the Government of South Africa which are inconsistent with...¹⁹⁴

...the Council’s determination that
...the continued presence of the South African authorities in Namibia is illegal and that consequently all acts taken by the Government of South Africa on behalf of or concerning Namibia...are illegal and invalid.¹⁹⁵

192 - Namibia Advisory Opinion (1971), p. 54, para. 119.

193 - SC Res. 20 ,301 November 1971, para. 2)6).

194 - SC Res. 30 ,276 January 1970, para. 5.

195 - SC Res. 30 ,276 January 1970, para. 2.

162. The present Court held that

Member States, in accordance with the duty of non-recognition under resolution 276 (1970), must refrain from sending diplomatic or special missions to South Africa that include Namibia, from sending consular agents to Namibia, and from allowing any such agents to remain. They must also inform South African authorities that maintaining diplomatic or consular relations with South Africa does not imply recognition of its authority over Namibia.¹⁹⁶

163. The Security Council subsequently called upon all States to refrain from any acts and in particular any dealings with the Government of South Africa implying recognition of the legality of, or lending support or assistance to, such presence and administration¹⁹⁷

And it called upon States maintaining diplomatic or consular relations with South Africa to take the following concrete steps:

issue a formal declaration to the Government of South Africa to the effect that they do not recognize any authority of South Africa with regard to Namibia and that they consider South Africa's continued presence in Namibia illegal...[and] terminate existing diplomatic and consular representation as far as they extend to Namibia, and to withdraw any diplomatic or consular mission or representative residing in the Territory.

20.a.iii.β. Obligation not to recognize Israel's purported annexation of any part of the OPT, including East Jerusalem and, relatedly, not to treat the OPT as if it were the sovereign territory of Israel

164. In the Friendly Relations and Cooperation Declaration, the General

196 - See Namibia Advisory Opinion (1971), p. 55, para. 123.

197 - SC Res. 20 ,301 October 1971, para. 6.

Assembly affirmed that “no territorial acquisition resulting from the threat or use of force shall be recognized as legal”.¹⁹⁸

165. States are obliged not to recognize Israel’s purported acquisition of territory (purported annexation) over any part of the OPT, including East Jerusalem. Relatedly, States must not treat any part of the OPT, including East Jerusalem, as if it were the sovereign territory of Israel, whether or not this treatment is based on or linked to any claim made by Israel in this regard. In Resolution 2334 of 2016, the Security Council reaffirmed the obligations of non-recognition and distinction.

166. On Israel’s illegal purported annexation of East Jerusalem in particular, Security Council in Resolution 478 (1980) responded to the adoption of the basic law in the following terms:

Decides not to recognize the "basic law" and such other actions by Israel that, as a result of this law, seek to alter the character and status of Jerusalem and calls upon:

- (a) All Member States to accept this decision;
- (b) Those States that have established diplomatic missions at Jerusalem to withdraw such missions from the Holy City.¹⁹⁹

20.a.iii.γ. Obligation of non-recognition: economic matters in particular

167. The duty of non-recognition includes a requirement not to enter into economic dealings with Israel concerning the occupied territories since they would presuppose, at a minimum, that Israel has legitimate authority with respect to them (whether on a sovereign or a non-sovereign basis). This position was adopted in relation to South Africa with respect to Namibia, where the present Court held:

198 - Friendly Relations and Co-operation Declaration (1970).

199 - SC Res. 20 ,478 August 1980, para. 5.

The restraints which are implicit in the non-recognition of South Africa's presence in Namibia and the explicit provisions of paragraph 5 of resolution 276 (1970) impose upon Member States the obligation to abstain from entering into economic and other forms of relationship or dealings with South Africa on behalf of or concerning Namibia which may entrench its authority over the Territory.²⁰⁰

168. The duty of non-recognition requires States to ensure that that no State companies are involved in corporate activity operating in or more broadly linked to the OPT, insofar as this activity concerns Israel or Israeli companies, including those owned by or linked to settlers and/or operating in settlements, bearing in mind that such companies operate on an illegal basis in the OPT. In the context of South Africa and Namibia, the Security Council called on States to ensure that companies and enterprises under the direct ownership or control of the State cease all dealings with or in Namibia, and cease investment activity therein.²⁰¹

169. All States must also regulate other companies registered in their jurisdictions to ensure that they are not involved in the corporate activity outlined in the previous paragraph. Otherwise, such States would be failing in their duty not to recognize as lawful the occupation itself, and the presence of and activities of Israeli settlers, including those who run and own companies operating there, notably in settlements. The duty of non-recognition is engaged here because it is impossible for foreign companies to comply with local law and/or the rule of law when engaged in the corporate activity outlined in the previous paragraph, since such law is either non-existent or, because it operates on a basis that involves a violation of international law, invalid.

20.b. No aid or assistance

20.b.i. General principle

200 - See Namibia Advisory Opinion (1971), p. 55, para. 124.

201 - SC Res. 29 ,283 July 1970, paras. 7-4.

170. A further general principle of law arising out of the concept of illegality is that States must not provide aid or assistance to Israel's illegal behaviour. This was again indicated by Judge Higgins in her Separate Opinion to the present Court's Wall Advisory Opinion, in her observation, made in conjunction with the earlier observation concerning non-recognition, "[t]hat an illegal situation is not to be...assisted by third parties is self-evident".²⁰² As with non-recognition, this is a general principle of law in the sense that it is inherent in the concept of law and the rule of law itself.²⁰³

171. As with the obligation of non-recognition, an obligation not to aid or assist illegality also exists in international law in relation to breaches of particular fundamental rules. This has the effect of reinforcing, and concretizing as a specific obligation, the operation of this more general principle in the particular context of the breaches covered. It is addressed separately below.

20.b.ii. As invoked in other contexts

172. In the context of South Africa's illegal presence in Namibia, the present Court found that member States of the United Nations are "under obligation to refrain from lending any support or any form of assistance to South Africa with reference to its occupation of Namibia".²⁰⁴

173. In the context of territories under Portuguese colonial control in 1965, the Security Council resolved to:

[Request] all States to refrain forthwith from offering the Portuguese Government any assistance which would enable it to continue its repression of the people of the Territories under its administration; and to take all the necessary measures to prevent the sale and supply of arms and military equipment to the Portuguese Government for this purpose, including the sale and shipment of equipment and materials for the manufacture and maintenance of arms and ammunition to be used in the Territories under Portuguese administration.²⁰⁵

20.b.iii. As invoked in the present context

174. In General Assembly Resolution 3414, 5 December 1975, it Request[ed] all States to desist from supplying Israel with any military or economic aid as long as it continues to occupy Arab territories and deny the inalienable national rights of the Palestinian people.²⁰⁶

In Resolution 36/27 of 13 November 1981, the General Assembly “[r]eiterates its call to all States to cease forthwith any provision to Israel of arms and related material of all types which enable it to commit acts of aggression against other States”.²⁰⁷ In Resolution 36/226A, 17 December 1981, the Assembly called on all States “to put an end to the flow to Israel of any military, economic, and financial resources that would encourage it to pursue its aggressive policies against the Arab countries and the Palestinian people”.²⁰⁸ The Assembly also

Considers that the agreements on strategic co-operation between the United States of America and Israel signed on 30 November 1981 would encourage Israel to pursue its aggressive and expansionist policies and practices in the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, would have adverse effects on efforts for the establishment of a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the Middle East and would threaten the security of the region.²⁰⁹

In Resolution 38/180A of 1983, the General Assembly deplored “any political, economic, financial, military and technological support to Israel that encourages Israel to commit acts of aggression and to consolidate and perpetuate its occupation and annexation of occupied Arab territories”,²¹⁰ and called “once more” upon all Member States:

(a) To refrain from supplying Israel with any weapons and related equipment and to suspend any military assistance that Israel receives from them;

(b) To refrain from acquiring any weapons or military equipment from Israel;

(c) To suspend economic, financial and technological assistance to and co-operation with Israel;

(d) To sever diplomatic trade and cultural relations with Israel.²¹¹

The General Assembly further declared, in Part E of the Resolution, “the international responsibility of any party or parties that supply Israel with arms or economic aid that augments its war potential”²¹² and condemned “all steps which may result in augmenting the capability of Israel and contributing to its policy of aggression against countries in the region”.²¹³ In particular, it demanded that all States, and particularly the United States of America, “refrain from taking any step that would support Israel’s war capabilities and consequently its aggressive acts”,²¹⁴ and called upon States to “review... any agreement, whether military, economic or otherwise, concluded with Israel”.²¹⁵

175. On settlements in particular, in Resolutions 465 (1980) and 471 (1980) the Security Council called on all States “not to provide Israel with any assistance to be used specifically in connection with settlements in the occupied territories”.²¹⁶

The General Assembly has reiterated this call on an annual basis.

20.c. General duty to ensure the realization of Israel's compliance with the law of self-determination and the core/basic protective rules of IHL

20.c.i. Introduction

176. Two of the fundamental areas of international law violated by Israel in the existence and conduct of the occupation have a special obligation attached to them, reflective of the underlying idea of a generalized interest that is the basis for the obligations having erga omnes status: all States bear a general obligation to ensure they are not violated by Israel. These areas of international law are, first, the right of self-determination, and, second, the core/basic protective obligations of IHL.

20.c.ii. Self-determination

177. According to the Friendly Relations and Co-operation Declaration,

Every State has the duty to promote, through joint and separate action, realization of the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples... and to render assistance to the United Nations in carrying out the responsibilities entrusted to it by the Charter regarding the implementation of the principle . . . ²¹⁷

Every State has the duty to refrain from any forcible action which deprives peoples of their right to self-determination and freedom and independence. In their actions against, and resistance to, such forcible action in pursuit of the exercise of their right to self-determination, such peoples are entitled to seek and to receive support [emphasis added]. ²¹⁸

20.c.iii. The core/basic protective rules of IHL

178. Article 1 common to the four Geneva Conventions reads as follows: “[t]

²¹⁷ Friendly Relations and Co-operation Declaration (1970).

²¹⁸ - Ibid.

he High Contracting Parties undertake to respect and to ensure respect for the present Convention in all circumstances” (emphasis added).²¹⁹ Common Article 1 was confirmed as customary international law in the Nicaragua decision of the present Court.²²⁰ The present Court held in the Wall Advisory Opinion that “[i]t follows from that provision [common Article 1] that every State party to that Convention, whether or not it is a party to a specific conflict, is under an obligation to ensure that the requirements of the instruments in question are complied with” (emphasis added).²²¹

20.c.iv. Practical significance

179. This general duty takes on a practical significance in the form of three specific duties borne by States to suppress Israel’s violations of the two areas of international law covered by it.

20.d. Three specific duties to suppress Israel’s violations of international law

20.d.i. Introduction

180. States bear a tripartite set of specific suppression obligations (one positive, two, related (based on the overall concept of abstention), negative) relating to Israel’s breaches of international law. These are:

- (1) To co-operate to bring them to an end.
- (2) Not to recognize the situation that gives rise to them.
- (3) Not to aid or assist in them.

219 - GC I, Art. 1; GC II, Art. 1; GC III, Art. 1; GC IV, Art. 1.

220 - Military and Paramilitary Activities in and Against Nicaragua Merits Judgment (1986), pp. 115-114, para. 220.

221 - Wall Advisory Opinion (2004), p. 136, para. 157.

As indicated above, States are already required to follow (2) and (3) as a matter of legal principle concerning illegality as a general matter. Here, they are subject to the same requirement as a matter of a specific set of legal obligations tied to breaches of certain fundamental rules.

20.d.ii. Two different bases for these rules

181. These obligations arise on two separate bases in relation to two different types of violations of the relevant rules.

20.d.ii.α. Basis 1: For all violations, of rules that a) operate erga omnes, and b) in relation to which States bear the foregoing obligation to ensure implementation

182. In the case of violations of the right of self-determination, and core/basic protective norms of IHL, in particular, the present Court indicated in the Wall Advisory Opinion that States bear the foregoing obligations in relation to these violations, given that the rules violated have the following two characteristics: (1), they operate erga omnes, and (2), as indicated above, linked to this status, primary obligations to promote the realization of these obligations by all States exist in international law (in the case of self-determination, in the Friendly Relations and Co-operation Resolution of the General Assembly; in the case of the core/basic protective rules of IHL, in common Article 1 to the four Geneva Conventions).²²²

183. Thus, in line with the Court's approach in the Wall Advisory Opinion, Israel's violations in these two areas of international law trigger the tripartite suppression obligations for third States. This elaborates, through three specific duties, the general responsibility of States to ensure Israel's adherence to these areas of international law as previously outlined.

²²² - The Court emphasises these two elements of each of the two areas of international law (Wall Advisory Opinion (2004), p. 199, para. 156 for self-determination; pp. 200-199, paras. 158-157 for IHL), follows this with "Given the character and...importance of the rights and obligations involved", and affirms the three obligations in relation to these two areas of international law (Ibid., p. 200, para. 159).

20.d.ii.β. Basis 2:

For ‘serious’ violations, of rules that have jus cogens status

184. As indicated above, one of the two consequences of certain obligations in international law having jus cogens status is that, as a matter of the law of State responsibility as articulated in the ILC’s ARSIWA and its draft conclusions on jus cogens obligations, ‘serious breaches’ of such obligations, in the words of the Commentary on the ARSIWA, “attract additional consequences, not only for the responsible State but [also] for all other States”.²²³ These additional consequences are the three suppression-related obligations being addressed presently, which all States bear in the case of a serious breach of a peremptory norm of general international law by any State. This is reflected in the following stipulation by the UN Human Rights Council in resolution 49/28 of 11 April 2022:

Calls upon all States to ensure their obligations of non-recognition, non-aid or assistance with regard to the serious breaches of peremptory norms of international law by Israel... and also calls upon them to cooperate further to bring, through lawful means, an end to these serious breaches and a reversal of Israel’s illegal policies and practices.²²⁴

As indicated above, the existence and conduct of the occupation involves serious breaches of peremptory norms of general international law by Israel. In consequence, the suppression obligations borne by other States on the present basis are engaged.

20.d.ii.γ. Consolidating the treatment of these bases, and the violations by Israel covered by the three duties

185. The first basis for States bearing suppression obligations is limited to Israel’s violations of the law of self-determination and the core/basic protective rules

223 - ARSIWA, Part Two, Ch. III Commentary, para. 7. On this area of State responsibility, see ARSIWA, Arts. 41-40; ILC jus cogens Draft Conclusions & Commentaries, Conclusion 19. See also ARSIWA, Part Two, Ch. III Commentary.

224 - Human Rights Council Res. 11 ,28/49 April 2022, preamble, para. 7.

of IHL. The second basis arises out of Israel's violations of a wider set of rules, including these two areas of law, based on the rules having jus cogens status. This second basis, however, only covers 'serious' violations, whereas the first basis covers all violations. That said, given that Israel's violations of international law are, in all the categories of rules, 'serious' (as indicated above) they all fall into the category that would trigger States' tripartite suppression obligations on the second basis. For present purposes, then, there is no need to address the suppression obligations differently in terms of the two different bases on which they operate, since in this instance the difference has no material significance. Given this, the following coverage of the three obligations is based on a consolidation of the treatment of each as a matter of the particular bases for them.

186. What follows pertains to Israel's violations of international law, particularly those rules with jus cogens status. These violations are deemed "serious" and, with regard to the right of self-determination and core IHL protections, the rules operate erga omnes. Consequently, States are bound by a general obligation to ensure that Israel realizes these rights and obligations.

- (1) The right of self-determination.
- (2) The prohibition of aggression, including the prohibition of the acquisition of territory by threat or use of force.
- (3) The prohibition of apartheid.
- (4) The core/basic protective rules of IHL.
- (5) The prohibition of racial discrimination generally (beyond apartheid in particular).
- (6) The prohibition of torture and cruel, inhuman and degrading treatment and punishment.

20.d.iii. Duty (1):

Obligation to cooperate to bring to an end, through lawful means, the violations

187. In the Wall Advisory Opinion, the present Court stated that:

It is...for all States, while respecting the United Nations Charter and international law, to see to it that any impediment, resulting from the construction of the wall, to the exercise by the Palestinian people of its right to self-determination is brought to an end. In addition, all the States parties to the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War of 12 August 1949 are under an obligation, while respecting the United Nations Charter and international law, to ensure compliance by Israel with international humanitarian law as embodied in that Convention.²²⁵

188. For the sub-set of these violations and violations of other jus cogens norms that are ‘serious’, as a matter of the law of State responsibility States bear the duty to cooperate with one another—“a joint and coordinated effort by all States”—to bring the breaches to an end.²²⁶

189. No particular form of cooperation is prescribed by international law, given the multiplicity of possibilities that exist. Such possibilities include both institutionalized cooperation (for instance, through the United Nations) and non-institutionalized cooperation.²²⁷

190. On the United Nations, in the Chagos Advisory Opinion the present Court held, in the context of self-determination and its status as an erga omnes right, that “while it is for the General Assembly to pronounce on the modalities required to ensure the completion of the decolonization of Mauritius, all Member States must co-operate with the United Nations to put those modalities into effect” and also “that all Member States must co-operate with the United Nations to complete the decolonization of Mauritius”.²²⁸

225 - Wall Advisory Opinion (2004), p. 200, para. 159.

226 - ARSIWA, Art. 1(41); Quotation from ARSIWA, Part Two, Ch. III, Art. 41 Commentary, para. 3. 191. One aspect of international cooperation would be to seek to give effect to those resolutions of the General Assembly and Security Council which have on numerous occasions called for Israel's violations of international law to end, as outlined above. Some of these resolutions have expressly called upon third States to support the Palestinian people,²²⁹ and to withhold military and economic aid to Israel.²³⁰ Regardless of whether or not there are express stipulations addressed to member States of this kind, States can use the determinations as a part guide when determining what they must focus on in discharging their present obligation to bring Israel's breaches to an end.

192. States may also deploy a regime of sanctions aimed at curbing economic activity with Israel generally. These sanctions can also be deployed against key government officials involved in supporting and or promoting illegal activity. This may extend to freezing bank accounts and assets abroad, and restrictions on travel.

20.d.iv. Duty (2):

Obligation of non-recognition

193. In the Wall Advisory Opinion, the present Court, in the context of the law of self-determination and IHL, stated that

...all States are under an obligation not to recognize the illegal situation resulting from the construction of the wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including in and around Jerusalem.²³¹

229 - GA Res. 5 ,3236 November 1974, para. 6 ("The General Assembly ... Appeals to all States and international organizations to extend their support to the Palestinian people in in its struggle to restore its rights, in accordance with the Charter").

230 - GA Res. 5 ,3414 December 1975, para. 3 (The General Assembly ... Requests all States to desist from supplying Israel with any military or economic aid as long as it continues to occupy Arab territories and deny the inalienable national rights of the Palestinian people"; GA Res. 226/36A, 17 December 1981, para. 13 (The General Assembly ... Calls upon all States to put an end to the flow to Israel of any military, economic and financial resources that would encourage it to pursue it aggressive policies against the Arab countries and the Palestinian people").

231 - Wall Advisory Opinion (2004), p. 200, para. 159.

194. For the sub-set of these violations and violations of other jus cogens norms that are ‘serious’, as a matter of the law of State responsibility States are obliged not to “recognize as lawful” the “situation created by” the breaches.²³² This is reflected in the dictum of the International Criminal Court in The Prosecutor v. Bosco Ntaganda that “as a general principle of law, there is a duty not to recognize situations created by certain serious breaches of international law”.²³³ According to the commentary to the ARSIWA,

The obligation applies to “situations” created by these breaches, such as, for example, attempted acquisition of sovereignty over territory through the denial of the right of self-determination of peoples. It not only refers to the formal recognition of these situations, but also prohibits acts which would imply such recognition.²³⁴

195. However, as Judge Higgins observed in relation to the aforementioned dictum from the Wall Advisory Opinion, “[t]hat an illegal situation is not to be recognized...is self-evident”.²³⁵ Coverage of specific duty of non-recognition as indicated in the present section has therefore been folded into the general position of non-recognition addressed above.

20.d.v. Duty (3):

Obligation not to render aid or assistance in maintaining the illegal situation

196. In the Wall Advisory Opinion, the present Court, in the context of the law of self-determination and IHL, stated that all States...are under an obligation not to render aid or assistance in maintaining the [illegal] situation created by [the construction of the Wall].²³⁶

For the sub-set of these violations and violations of other jus cogens norms that are ‘serious’, as a matter of the law of State responsibility, States are obliged to refrain from rendering aid or assistance to Israel in maintaining the situation that constitutes these breaches.²³⁷

197. However, again as Judge Higgins observed in relation to the aforementioned dictum from the Wall Advisory Opinion, “[t]hat an illegal situation is not to be... assisted is self-evident”.²³⁸ As with the related duty of non-recognition, then, coverage of the present specific duty not to aid or assist Israel’s violations of certain norms has been folded into the general position concerning the requirement not to aid or assist Israel in relation to its illegality as a general matter above.

20.e. Entitlement to invoke a breach of obligations erga omnes partes and erga omnes

20.e.i. Introduction

198. All States have the legal right to invoke the responsibility of Israel for breaching obligations that are a) binding on a particular group of States including Israel (if they are in this group), established for the protection of a collective interest (an erga omnes partes obligation),²³⁹ and/or b) exist generally (i.e. are applicable to all States) and are owed to the international community as a whole,

III, Art. 41 Commentary, para. 12, and ILC jus cogens Draft Conclusions & Commentaries, Conclusion 13, para. 13 and sources cited therein.

i.e. obligations with erga omnes status.²⁴⁰

20.e.ii. Two bases

20.e.ii.α. (1) Erga omnes partes

199. Obligations erga omnes partes apply to a particular group of States and exist for the purpose of protecting a collective interest.²⁴¹ Usually, such obligations exist in a treaty, although they can also exist in customary international law.²⁴² Such obligations “are owed by any State party to all the other States”²⁴³ such that when any given State breaches them, all other States within the group can invoke the breach even if they were not directly injured or they do not have some other special interest in it (e.g. it concerned harm to their nationals).²⁴⁴

200. Whether a treaty contains erga omnes partes obligations depends on its text. Interpreting the Treaty of Versailles in S.S. Wimbledon, the Permanent Court identified a common legal interest in “the intention of the authors ... to facilitate access to the Baltic by establishing an international regime, and consequently to keep the canal open at all times to foreign vessels of every kind”.²⁴⁵ In Belgium v. Senegal, the present Court identified the erga omnes partes nature of obligations under the Convention Against Torture in the treaty’s preambular call “to make more effective the struggle against torture...throughout the world”.²⁴⁶ Consequently, “the obligations in question are owed by any State party to all the other States Parties to the Convention”²⁴⁷ and States have “a common interest to ensure, in view of their shared values, that acts of torture are prevented and that, if they occur, the authors do not enjoy impunity”.²⁴⁸ In Reservations to the Convention Against Genocide, the Court emphasised that States had a common interest in each other’s compliance with the Genocide Convention, because its “object on the one hand is to safeguard the very existence of certain human groups and on the other to confirm and endorse the most elementary principles of morality”.²⁴⁹ In Gambia v. Myanmar, the Court affirmed the “right of all other Contracting Parties to assert the common interest in compliance with the obligations erga omnes partes under the Convention”.²⁵⁰

201. Israel’s breaches include of treaty obligations that operate erga omnes partes. The aforementioned approach taken by the present Court and its predecessor would indicate that all Israel’s obligations in human rights treaties that have been breached have this character, as do certain core/basic protective IHL treaty norms.

20.e.ii.β. (2) Erga omnes obligations (and by association, jus cogens obligations)

202. All States can also invoke Israel’s breach of erga omnes obligations as a matter of general international law.²⁵¹ Such obligations are owed to the international community as a whole and, therefore, as the present Court held in the Barcelona Traction case, “by their very nature ... are the concern of all States” and “[a]ll States can be held to have a legal interest in their protection...”.²⁵² The ILC Draft conclusions on jus cogens norms (the Commentary of which, as already indicated, observing that norms with jus cogens status also have erga omnes status) holds that “any State is entitled to invoke the responsibility of another State for a breach of a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens)” .²⁵³

20.e.iii. What States can do

20.e.iii.α. Call upon Israel—cessation, assurance of non-repetition, reparation

203. States are legally entitled to call on Israel to perform the three breach-consequence-related obligations outlined above: cessation, assurances of non-repetition, and reparation.

20.e.iii.β. Take measures to induce cessation and reparation

204. States are also entitled to take lawful measures against Israel to induce the aforementioned cessation and reparation.²⁵⁴ (They are of course also obliged to take such measures under the separate obligation reviewed earlier, which, as it covers breaches of jus cogens obligations, necessarily covers obligations that also have erga omnes status).

205. In addition, countermeasures—acts that are ordinarily wrongful, but where wrongfulness is precluded by the fact that they are taken in response to another State’s wrongful act— against Israel on the same grounds may also be legal permissible. The 2001 ARSIWA Commentary noted that State practice on countermeasures by non-injured States “is limited and embryonic,” mentioning the use of trade embargoes, asset freezes, travel bans, boycotts, and other unilateral and multilateral sanctions.²⁵⁵ The conclusion then was that the current state of international law on countermeasures taken in the general or collective interest is uncertain.

254 - ARSIWA, Art. 54.

255 - ARSIWA, Part Three, Ch. II, Art. 54 Commentary paras. 3 and 4 (quotation from para 3).

State practice is sparse and involves a limited number of States. At present, there appears to be no clearly recognized entitlement of States referred to in article 48 [concerning erga omnes obligations] to take countermeasures in the collective interest.²⁵⁶

206. Notably, the Commentary did not hold that that such countermeasures would be unlawful—the position was left open. In the over-two-decade-period since the Commentary was completed, a right to take such measures may have crystallized.²⁵⁷

20.e.iii.γ. Bring a claim

207. States have potential standing to bring a claim before a court or tribunal against Israel for its breaches of obligations erga omnes partes and erga omnes. Examples of standing established on the basis of obligations in the former category are the Permanent Court in the aforementioned S.S. Wimbledon, allowing Italy and Japan to bring a claim against Germany for refusing to grant access to the Kiel Canal, despite not being individually injured;²⁵⁸ and the present Court permitting Gambia to bring a claim against Myanmar under the Genocide Convention despite being uninjured by Myanmar's actions.²⁵⁹

208. The possibility of such a claim would depend inter alia on whether a court or tribunal would have jurisdiction to hear it. One potential option here is the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination under the International Convention on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, of which Israel is a party.²⁶⁰ Article 11(1) of the ICERD reads,

If a State Party considers that another State Party is not giving effect to the provisions of this Convention, it may bring the matter to the attention of the Committee.²⁶¹

This mechanism does not require Israel’s prior consent for the Committee to be seized, and no reservation has been made to Articles 11 and 13 by any Party to the Convention.²⁶² Indeed, in a decision in a ‘communication’ (as such complaints are termed) brought by the State of Palestine against Israel, the CERD has, in tandem with the jurisprudence and interpretations of the ECtHR, the IACtHR, and HRC, emphasised that human rights obligations are “non-synallagmatic”.²⁶³ They impose collective obligations, rather than a “web of inter-State exchanges of mutual obligations”.²⁶⁴ Consequently, “any State party may trigger the collective enforcement machinery created by the respective treaty, independently from the existence of correlative obligations between the concerned parties”.²⁶⁵ Such an approach advances the “object and purpose” of human rights treaties,²⁶⁶ rooted as they are “in superior common values shared by the international community as a whole”.²⁶⁷

209. Therefore, under the ICERD, any of the 182 State Parties to the ICERD may bring a communication (complaint) against Israel for its violations of the ICERD in the OPT.²⁶⁸

21. Consequences for the United Nations

21.a. General legal framework

210. The general principles of non-recognition, and non-aid and assistance, apply to the United Nations in the same way they apply to States. Therefore, the legal consequences of Israel's violations of international law for the United Nations are clear: it must neither recognize nor aid or assist in any form of this illegality.

211. The commentary to the ILC draft Conclusions on peremptory norms also indicates that the aforementioned tripartite suppression obligations arising in the circumstances of serious breaches of jus cogens norms apply “as appropriate, to international organizations”.²⁶⁹ In consequence, the foregoing requirements of non-recognition and non-aid/assistance apply again on this basis, supplemented by an obligation to take action to bring the illegal situation to an end, in the particular context of breaches of jus cogens norms by Israel. On the obligation of non-recognition, according to the commentary,

...if States are under an obligation not to recognize as lawful situations created by a serious breach of a peremptory norm or to assist in the maintenance of such situations, it stands to reason that international organizations are under a similar obligation. ²⁷⁰

On the obligation to take action, according to the commentary,

The obligation of States to act collectively to bring to an end serious breaches of peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) has particular consequences for cooperation within the organs of the United Nations and other international organizations. It means that, in the face of serious breaches of peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens), international organizations should act, within their respective mandates and when permitted to do so under international law, to bring to an end such breaches. Thus, where an international organization has the discretion to act, the obligation to cooperate imposes a duty on the members of that international organization to act with a view to the organization exercising that discretion in a manner to bring to an end the breach of a peremptory norm of general international law (jus cogens). A duty of international organizations to exercise discretion in a manner that is intended to bring to an end serious breaches of peremptory norms of general international law (jus cogens) is a necessary corollary of the obligation to cooperate. ²⁷¹ to bring to an end the illegal situation...taking due account of the present Advisory Opinion”.²⁷²

213. In the Chagos Advisory Opinion, the present Court noted that “[t]he modalities necessary for ensuring the completion of the decolonization of Mauritius fall within the remit of the United Nations General Assembly, in the exercise of its functions relating to decolonization” and that “it is for the General Assembly to pronounce on the modalities required to ensure the completion of the decolonization of Mauritius”, and “all Member States must co-operate with the United Nations to put those modalities into effect”.²⁷³

21.b.ii.Example from the General Assembly of non-recognition and non-assistance in the maintenance of unlawful situation

214. In the context of the UK’s continued exercise of authority over the Chagos archipelago on a purported basis of enjoying sovereignty, in violation of the law of self-determination, the General Assembly affirmed an obligation of non-recognition of any act by the UK that presupposed the enjoyment of sovereignty over the Chagos Islands by that State, including dealing with the UK on the basis of the name it gave to the Islands implying such sovereignty, the ‘British Indian Ocean Territory’. It called ...upon the United Nations and all its specialized agencies ... to refrain from impeding that process [of decolonization] by recognizing, or giving effect to any measure taken by or on behalf of, the ‘British Indian Ocean Territory’²⁷⁴
